Now, just a word in connection with what was stated by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER]. These two gentlemen agreed that whenever legislation was sought that would release the competent Indian from the supervision of the Indian Bureau obstacles were invariably encountered. That has been true ever since I have been a Member of Congress, but before going into that I will say that the Indian has only been subject to the civilizing influence of the white man for some 200 years past. When the white man first came to this continent the Indian was pushed back and did not rub up against and amalgamate with his civilization, but finally the white man permeated the whole Western Hemisphere and came in close contact with the Indian, and as he did so the Indian became civilized. We have now a great many Indians who have been released from departmental supervision and I think a great many more ought to be released, and I shall cheerfully and heartily join with the gentleman from New York in any measure that will look to giving competent Indians more liberty. But after all, Mr. Chairman, the Indian has made wonderful progress. He has accomplished in perhaps a couple of hundred years what it took the egotistic, bragging, bluffing, blowing Anglo-Saxon 2,000 years to accomplish. [Applause.]

It is true he has been subject to the civilizing influence of the white man during that time, a thing for which he should be quite thankful and for which I think he is thankful, but the moment that a measure is presented here which has for its purpose releasing Indians from the supervision of the Government—and I say this without any reflection whatever on our present Indian Bureau, because the circumstances have always been the same ever since I have been here—that very moment we have first to contend with the inclination of the department not to relinquish jurisdiction and the inclination of this bureau, like every other department of the Government, to keep its hand on everything over which it has had supervision in the past. Just as a judge in a court dislikes to decide his jurisdiction away himself, so every department, so every individual, dislikes to surrender prerogatives. Now, there is but one body that can attend to having the Indian released. There is but one body that is competent to which the Indian can look for relief along this line, and that is the Congress of the United States. And what is the procedure?

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. I shall be very glad to yield to my friend from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. To put the question that the jurisdiction is persisted in because they do not want to lose it is rather degrading to the Indian Bureau, and to put it on the basis that we want to relieve the jurisdiction because we want to do more good for the Indian, and he resists that, leaves an individual like myself, who does not know, inclined to vote with the people who would be regarded as experts in having studied the Indian problem, and consequently I have been inclined to vote always with the Indian Bureau. I would like for a man like the gentleman who is on the floor and who certainly knows the problems to put the facts in a way that an indifferent man like myself, who does not know anything about the Indian question, can vote perfectly free, and I would like to shear these bureaus of some of their power, if I am not acting upon prejudice against them. I have had so much to influence me against them that I am afraid sometimes I can not act impartially toward them. If the gentleman can convince us, who are in the habit of voting for these experts because they are experts, that we are wrong I would like to join the crowd who demand the reform you have suggested.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. I will.

Mr. TILLMAN. Speaking of experts, I would like to ask the gentleman from Oklahoma who is at the head of the Indian Bureau at the present time?

Mr. CARTER. Commissioner Sells.

Mr. TILLMAN. Has he been a citizen of Oklahoma, or has he lived where there were any considerable number of Indians?

Mr. CARTER. No; I do not think so.

Mr. TILLMAN. In what State did he live prior to his selection as Commissioner of Indian Affairs?

Mr. CARTER. I think he came from Texas.

Mr. TILLMAN. Speaking of experts, the gentleman occupying the floor is an Indian, is he not?

Mr. CARTER. Yes, sir.

Mr. TILLMAN. To what tribe does the gentleman belong?

Mr. CARTER. To the Cherokee and Chickasaw Tribe.

Mr. TILLMAN. And born and reared in Oklahoma?

Mr. CARTER. Yes, sir.

Mr. TILLMAN. What per cent of the Indians of the country live in Oklahoma? There are 300,000 of these people in all America, I believe.

Mr. CARTER. About one-third of them.

Mr. TILLMAN. The gentleman served on the Committee on Indian Affairs during his incumbency in Congress, has he not?

Mr. CARTER. Yes, sir.

Mr. TILLMAN. Can not the gentleman qualify as an expert upon Indian problems?

Mr. CARTER. Well, I might qualify to my own satisfaction and to the satisfaction of all others who stand with me, but I might find considerable difficulty in satisfying some of the professional philanthropists and bureau officials who disagree with us.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will ask the gentleman how many men of Indian blood represent in this Congress districts in Oklahoma?

Mr. CARTER. Two.

Mr. TILLMAN. Is not one of the Senators an Indian also?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. TILLMAN. Your people down there are fairly just to the Indians, are they not, in that respect?

Mr. CARTER. We have about 120,000 Indians and about 2,000,000 people, and 3 out of 10 of their representatives are Indians and the rest are white people.

Mr. TILLMAN. Are not many of the county offices and other public positions held by Indians?

Mr. CARTER. In almost every county on the east side of the State there are Indians in the county offices.

Mr. TILLMAN. Are these Indians prosperous or poor?

Mr. CARTER. Many of the mixed-blood Indians are very prosperous, as are some of the full-blood Indians. Of course some of the uneducated full-blood Indians in Oklahoma are not prosperous. They may have an immense lot of wealth, but it does not get to them.

Mr. TILLMAN. The gentleman's opinion, then, is, I assume, that the Members who represent Oklahoma, three of whom are Indians, have the interest of the Indians at heart, and the opinion and advice of the Oklahoma delegation ought to have persuasive influence with the House in determining what should be done with the Indians themselves and the problems affecting their destiny.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman asks me a question which I am inclined very strongly to answer in the affirmative, but which modesty prevents. Now, let me reply briefly to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS]. The gentleman being himself an expert knows that there are experts and experts, and that there are usually radical differences of opinion among these so-called experts. There are experts well grounded in efficiency and experts in name only, who know nothing whatever about the subject on which they are supposed to be experts. Sometimes the opinions and ideas of even our best versed experts are controlled more or less by selfish interests. This must be true in the very nature of things, for at best our most expert experts are nothing more nor less than human beings, and therefore might be unconsciously influenced by selfish interests. The gentleman may say that my position is influenced by the same selfish instinct. I am not gainsaying that, but I do say that being an Indian myself, having the interests of the progress and betterment of the race at heart, I have tried to my uttermost to eliminate selfishness from my view of these questions. I have tried to look at this proposition upon the broad and sole ground of helping to make the Indian self-sustaining and fully competent to care for himself.

But do not condemn the Indian Bureau throughout. No doubt they have done some very good work. Especially do I commend Secretary Lane's order for competency commissions, whereby a step is taken toward relieving the competent Indian from the shackles of Federal supervision. The difficulty is the Secretary has not provided a sufficient number of competency commissions, and those he has appointed I do not think have been active enough. If we had sufficient competency commissions that would go a long way toward solving the problem.

Mr. FERRIS. Is not the real trouble with the Indian problem the separating of the real Indian from the so-called white Indian?

Mr. CARTER. I was coming to that.

Mr. LITTLE. I would like to know if all the Osages are well to do financially?

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER] has just stated that they have an annual income of $4,000 a year, man, woman, and child.

Mr. LITTLE. You said a moment ago that some of the Indian full bloods were not well to do.

Mr. CARTER. I do not think the gentleman caught my full statement. I said they were probably wealthy, but that their wealth did not always reach them.

Mr. LITTLE. That is what I am trying to get at. Do not the Osages get the use of that money?

Mr. CARTER. I think the Osages do, absolutely. I think they get as much money as they can spend judiciously.

Mr. LITTLE. I was confident the gentleman would know. I wanted the information.

Mr. CARTER. My friend from Oklahoma [Mr. HOWARD] can answer the question. He represents the Osage country. I think he can tell whether the Osages are getting what should come to them or not. I am not very familiar with that part of the State.

Mr. HOWARD. I will say that the bonuses and royalties are all paid out to the Osages quarterly.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. I would like to ask what is the basis of classification? That is, what proportion of Indian blood will classify a man as an Indian?

Mr. CARTER. Any quantum of Indian blood entitles a person to enrollment, and enrollment, as a rule, gives him a full share in the Indian estate. There are some enrolled with the Five Civilized Tribes as of one two hundred and fifty-sixth part Indian blood.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. That is, the Indian blood is very strong——

Mr. CARTER. Any amount of Indian blood classifies him as an Indian and entitles him to get on the rolls in full participation in the tribal estate, provided he has met other requirements.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. If the committee is strongly convinced that the Indians are entitled to larger rights than they are now permitted to exercise, what objection, if any, would there be to the presentation of a bill that would bring that question squarely upon its merits and prevent the interference of points of order as suggested here a moment ago?

Mr. CARTER. I reply to the gentleman by saying that I introduced in the last session of Congress a bill providing, first, to give citizenship to all American Indians in the United States that were born in the United States; then providing to give them patents in fee and pay over all tribal funds and release from departmental supervision all Indians of less than one-half Indian blood.

Now, this proposition of one-half Indian blood is not an arbitrary division mark set up without reason. There are good reasons for it. Let us consider for a moment what it takes to constitute an Indian of less than half Indian blood. An Indian of half blood or more may have two ancestors with Indian blood, and therefore may have been raised as an Indian. Not one Indian out of fifty who has two ancestors with white blood in his veins was raised as an Indian at all. He was raised just as Mr. HASTINGS was raised and just as I was raised, among Indians, in an Indian community, and perhaps went through the Indian schools, but had some little opportunity of the white man's schools after he had finished the Indian schools and had the advantage of white parentage on both sides. The Indian of less than half Indian blood must necessarily have had white blood in the veins of two ancestors, of both his mother and his father, else he would be half or more than half Indian blood; so that when you take an Indian of less than half Indian blood you have a man who was raised not as an Indian at all but who was raised as a white man was raised, and who has had the advantages of a white man.

Mr. JACOWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. With pleasure.

Mr. JACOWAY. I think the gentleman made a statement awhile ago as to which he is in error and to which I wish to call his attention. The gentleman stated that any amount of Indian blood entitled an Indian to be classed as an Indian and to be placed upon the roll. I want to ask the gentleman if he still stands for that?

Mr. CARTER. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. JACOWAY. You do not mean that, I am sure, because in the case of the Cherokees against the United States a different rule was laid down.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. HASTINGS. It does not require any greater percentage of Indian blood. Any percentage of Indian blood entitles you to be on the roll and gives you the same right as a full Indian, and there has never been any decision to the contrary.

Mr. JACOWAY. I beg to differ with the gentleman as to that.

Mr. HASTINGS. I have a roll over in my office now.

Mr. JACOWAY. Does a man not have to establish citizenship in the Cherokee Nation?

Mr. HASTINGS. Yes; he has to do that.

Mr. CARTER. There is no conflict in the decisions on quantum of Indian blood necessary to enrollment. In order to be enrolled with and participate in the estate of the Five Civilized Tribes, decisions by the courts have set up three requirements. First, some degree of Indian blood, no matter how remote; second, actual bona fide residence; and, third, affiliation with the tribe.

This bill that I have been discussing proposes further that after patents have been given to Indians of less than half Indian blood members of the competency commission shall visit each reservation annually with a view to looking up those Indians of half or more than half Indian blood, going to their homes, looking into the condition of their life, talking to them across the table, and thereby ascertaining the number among that class of Indians that are competent and can be released from the supervision of the Government. My notion is that that is the safest plan to follow.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. Who would form that committee?

Mr. CARTER. That committee would have to be appointed. My bill requires that one member of each of these commissions must be of Indian blood, one a member of the Board of Indian Commissioners, and one from the Indian Bureau officials with a civil-service status, and all to be appointed by the President.

The House, of course, could not have sufficient information to enable it to select the members of that committee. But the bill provides that this commission shall report annually to Congress. I wrote in that provision for the reason that I thought that the Congress ought to have a close supervision of the matter if we were to make the progress I thought we ought to make, so that we could be relieved of the charge that it was another Indian Bureau proposition, simply to go round and round and to get nowhere.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. FERRIS. We have some Indian competency commissions going around over the country now, have we not?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. FERRIS. Has the gentleman made an estimate of how much they have accomplished?

Mr. CARTER. I have not been able to.

Mr. FERRIS. May I inquire if they have done anything?

Mr. CARTER. Yes. They have removed some restrictions.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. What commission is that the gentleman refers to?

Mr. CARTER. The competency commission.

Mr. FERRIS. Is the information which they have furnished available anywhere?

Mr. CARTER. I have made inquiry about it, and I understand it will be ready in 10 days.

Mr. McKEOWN. So far as the character of the information is concerned, I understand restrictions have been removed from quite a number of Indians this year.

Mr. FERRIS. Would the gentleman have any objection to ascertaining the total number of Indians examined and the number declared to be competent by the commission?

Mr. CARTER. I will be very glad to secure that information and furnish it to the House.

Mr. FERRIS. If we ever solve this problem at all, I think it will be by dividing the real Indians from the white Indians.

Mr. CARTER. Our bureaus sometimes do not carry out the policies of Congress exactly as we intend, but they are the administrative officers, and no Congressman has anything to do with the carrying out or the execution of the law after it has been passed. The Congress can establish a policy, but it is left for the administrative officers of the Government to apply that policy to existing conditions. Congress proposes and the bureaus dispose.

I introduced the citizenship bill last year, and I think this, that since the Indian people have furnished to the Army of the United States from 300,000 persons about 10,000 soldiers, most of them volunteers, many of whom were slain, many of whom were wounded in the recent world's conflict; since they have purchased more Liberty bonds per capita than any other nationality, perhaps, in the United States; since they have contributed largely to the Red Cross and all the other war activities, the least that Congress could do, in my opinion, is to recognize them as full-fledged citizens of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CARTER. I will be glad to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Does not the gentleman think it strange that we should discriminate in that we give the aliens who put on the uniform full citizenship and withhold it from the native-born American Indian?

Mr. CARTER. I certainly do. [Applause.] I think the Indian ought to be given the right of citizenship, the right to vote in every State of the Union. I think he ought to be given the right of jury service in every State of the Union. When this is done you will have placed in his hands the most potential instrument that can be given him to work out his own civilization and his own future.

I hope that at some time during this session of Congress we may be able to have this bill called up and placed upon its passage, and I really can not see that there ought to be any very serious objection to it.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. I will be glad to yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman would not favor removing restrictions from the so-called blanket Indians, would he?

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman did not hear what I said before my last few sentences. The bill about which I spoke provides for the removal of restrictions, for the delivery of a fee patent, and for the delivery of all tribal funds to every Indian of less than half-Indian blood, and provides for a competency commission to seek out all the competent Indians who are of half or more than half Indian blood, and to place them upon their own responsibility. Certainly I think there are some Indians who must have supervision, but I agree with my friend from New York that the supervision of Indians has been woefully overdone.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. In your judgment about what per cent ought to be supervised?

Mr. CARTER. That is a hard question.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. I understand that any answer the gentleman could give would be a guess.

Mr. CARTER. That is a hard question to answer, because none of the tribes, except the Five Civilized Tribes and the Chippewas in Minnesota, have rolls made or in process of being made which give the quantum of blood, so that there is no way of arriving at an estimate; but I should say we ought to remove the supervision of the department from perhaps 15 to 30 per cent of the Indians of whom we are now taking care, and as time goes on the others could be released right along by this competency commission. In that manner the matter would be worked out until we could see some time in the dim, distant future when we may end our Indian problem and discontinue our Indian appropriation bill; but just as long as our present system continues we can expect that the estimates for the Indian appropriation bill are going to increase from year to year, and that Congress will provide more money from year to year, so that instead of our expenditures for the Indians decreasing we are going to have an increase as we go along.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Will the gentleman permit a further question?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Then one fundamental difficulty in thinking about the proposition is that we have no absolute data that will give us the quantum of blood, the number of blanket Indians as contrasted with those who are civilized—I mean exhaustive, reliable data?

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Would it not be a good idea, in connection with the census that is about to be taken, to secure data of that kind? Would such data be reliable?

Mr. CARTER. No; I think it would not be sufficiently reliable, because the census enumerator obtains his data in hasty fashion by going from house to house, without competent testimony. I think it would be better to have the data made up by the Interior Department or some department familiar with the problem, because they make up their data from competent evidence, administering an oath to the Indian to get at whether he is an Indian or not, and calling in witnesses just as they do in a court, which is not done in the taking of the census. Where so much depends upon this, I really think there ought to be a little more care taken in the making of the roll and the collection of the data.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. That is the reason I asked the question.

Mr. CARTER. I will say to the gentleman that my bill provides for the making up of this roll.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Have you determined even approximately the amount of money in this appropriation that will go for administrative purposes, and what amount goes to the Indians themselves?

Mr. CARTER. Does the gentleman mean in this bill?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. Practically all the appropriations are for administrative purposes. The proposition of giving money directly to the Indians never was a good policy.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I am opposed to it.

Mr. CARTER. That has been abandoned except where the money belongs to the Indian. I think when the Indian has money in the Treasury of the United States, the quicker you get it into his hands the better for the Indian and the better for the Government. If he is a competent man he will make good use of it. If he is incompetent, he will perhaps blow it in and come down to the level of the rest of us. He will come down out of the sky and his feet will touch the ground; he will not be held off the ground by the Indian Service, and when his feet touch the ground he will be on a solid foundation. When he sees necessity staring him in the face he will go to work, or at least a good many of the Indians will. I would not advocate that with reference to the Indian's land, but I can see no reason why he should not have his money.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Perhaps this opposition to the measure that the gentleman refers to is because of the large amount of money that goes into the hands of the officeholders who administer this department.

Mr. CARTER. Be that as it may, I have never advocated any increase in appropriations to the administrative forces of the Government.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. No; but perhaps the opposition comes from the department.

Mr. CARTER. Oh, perhaps the gentleman is right about that. I did not understand him.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman is undoubtedly familiar with the looting that took place on the White Earth Indian Reservation after the passage of the Clapp Act.

Mr. CARTER. I have a faint remembrance of it.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman is not arguing in favor of a return to those conditions?

Mr. CARTER. Oh, no. The thing that I suggest would prevent what occurred under the Clapp Act, because my bill provides that before these restrictions are removed, and before the fee patent shall be delivered, the degree of blood of the Indian must be determined by the Interior Department in a competent way, so that he can not come into court, when he is a full-blood Indian, and swear he is only one-eighth, and thereby have the right to make a transfer. I understand that to be the point of the gentleman's question.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. HASTINGS. If the gentleman remembers, we put a clause in the bill, and I think it is the same in the present bill, which provides that in the future when rolls are made the degree of Indian blood shall be set out.

Mr. CARTER. On the roll?

Mr. HASTINGS. Which will meet the very suggestions that have been made.

Mr. CARTER. The difficulty with the Clapp Act was that it provided that all mixed-blood Indians might dispose of their allotments. But the Clapp Act did not provide for a determination and designation of the quantum of Indian blood of each enrolled member of the tribe. In other words, it made no definition of the term "mixed-blood Indian," which was a very necessary thing to do when so much depended on the difference between a mixed blood and a full blood. Therefore the result was that a full-blooded Indian would come into court and say, "I am a half-blood Indian," or "I am a quarter-blood Indian, and I want to sell my land." That was all the evidence that the court had, and in a great many cases the lands were sold for a pittance. Suits were brought by the Department of Justice and I think some of the land recovered, but I suppose some of it never can be recovered. It was a very unsatisfactory condition.

Now, that is the very thing we want to avoid, and by having the rolls made and having the roll, conclusive evidence of the quantum of blood contained in the Indian, that will be avoided.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. I will.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman is very well versed in Indian matters and he knows that there are many cases where the seven-eighths-blood Indian is much more competent to manage affairs than the quarter blood.

Mr. CARTER. Yes; that is true.

Mr. KNUTSON. I have in mind a case which occurred in the Winnebago Reservation, Nebr., six or eight years ago, where a well-known citizen acquired 80 acres of land, worth about $100 an acre. He gave the Indian an old Ford automobile and $500 in cash. The Indian took his Ford to the city, sold it, spent all of his money, and came back broke.

Mr. CARTER. To begin with, the quarter-blood Indian is not entitled to much protection from the United States, and he does not want it, because, as I stated a few minutes ago, if he is a quarter blood he had two parents—mother and father—who both had white blood. Therefore he was raised, not as an Indian in nine cases out of ten, but as a white man, and if he is found to be incompetent he is incompetent for the same reason that any white man is incompetent, and perhaps we can never do very much for him.

We had a case in my county where an Indian, a half-blood Chickasaw, made application for the removal of restrictions. He is a very bright young fellow, whom I had known all his life, and I ventured a little advice to the department on his case. I said: "This fellow has as much sense as you or I, but he is a gambler. I do not think he drinks to amount to anything. It is true he follows house painting for a business, but he runs a gambling house, and if you ever expect any results from him the quicker he disposes of his land the better, for the quicker he gets the money for it and gambles it off the quicker he will go back to work painting, and sometime, maybe, he may settle down and follow his trade. Under these conditions, the quicker you remove his restrictions and let him go the better, because the land could never do him any good." The Secretary admitted that that was a view the department had never taken, but said he was going to try the policy out on this Indian. He did, and I think the young man is now doing very well. I inquired of him the last time I was in Oklahoma City, and they said that he had settled down and had begun to work again; and a man told me that he painted his house and did a good job. He may not have as much money as he had a year ago, but he gets along very well.

Mr. UPSHAW. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. UPSHAW. As a matter of information, I happen to know of a case where one Indian who is very wealthy wants to make a contribution of several thousand dollars to build a new church. He is not allowed to give anything. By what sort of Government procedure will that man be allowed to do what he wants to do?

Mr. CARTER. That sounds so much like the letters that we Members from Oklahoma are getting every day that I am almost ready to accuse the gentleman of reading my mail. What State does this Indian live in?

Mr. UPSHAW. Oklahoma.

Mr. CARTER. I had thought as much. The thing that man will have to do will be to submit an application to what they call the field clerk, who is a kind of a local agent. Then after it is submitted to the field clerk under the present system it goes to the superintendent at Muskogee. The superintendent submits it in a report to the Secretary of the Interior. He refers it to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs refers it to the assistant commissioner, and the assistant commissioner refers it to the removal-restriction clerk, who in turn sends it back to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and then it goes back to the Secretary of the Interior. Then it is sent to the superintendent of the Five Civilized Tribes, and finally back to the field clerk to advise the Indian, and by that time the result is that the Indian is either dead or the church has been built or its construction abandoned entirely. [Laughter.]

Mr. HAMILTON. A sort of circumlocution office, I guess?

Mr. CARTER. If the gentleman will permit, I will say that this is not guessed at; that is the precise procedure brought out on the examination we had of House bill 108, first session of the Sixty-fourth Congress. That was brought out by the commissioner himself, who stated on my cross-examination that this was the avenue through which the usual application must pass before it becomes final, and I think in all nine different men had to pass upon it before the Indian would finally get the matter settled.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman give us some suggestion as to what he would advise?

Mr. CARTER. I just stated that competency commissions was the solution.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. If such a state of affairs has existed for so long a time; if the distinguished gentleman on the committee has known of those facts; if the other members of the Committee on Indian Affairs have known of those facts for so long, whom shall Congress hold responsible—the Indian Department or the Committee on Indian Affairs—for not bringing in proper legislation doing away with this red tape?

Mr. CARTER. Congress has nobody on earth to hold responsible for it but itself.

Mr. BLANTON. We look primarily to the Indian Committee.

Mr. CARTER. I ask the gentleman not to make a speech while I am answering his question. Congress has nobody to hold responsible or to blame but itself. Take this specific case. That bill has been on the calendar for two years, but owing to the congested condition of legislation, because of war time, we were never able to get consideration of the bill. Outside of the Indian appropriation bill, I think we had consideration of only five or six bills respecting Indians during the war, and most of them were considered under unanimous consent. Of course, a man never could get a proposition like that through under unanimous consent.

Mr. BLANTON. This Congress will be in session day after day from now on, probably, we were last year and the year before last, and time and time again we met and adjourned without transacting any business. Surely the Committee on Indian Affairs could come in here with a piece of legislation if it wanted to.

Mr. CARTER. Did the gentleman mean to say that we adjourned many times without transacting business——

Mr. BLANTON. We had three-day adjournments time and again. The committee could have applied to the Committee on Rules with regard to the matter. The Committee on Rules was very vigilant last year in bringing in a rule on most everything.

Mr. CARTER. That reminds me of the story about the girl who when asked to marry told her would-be lover to "Go to father," and the young man in his lamentations said:

> She knew that I knew that her father was dead,
> She knew that I knew what a life he had led;
> She knew that I knew what she meant when she said—
> Go to father.

[Laughter and applause.]

The Rules Committee, as a matter of fact, had no time, with the other important duties of Congress here, to take this matter up during the war period. I am calling it to the attention of Congress now in order that during this session of Congress, and before it is over, this Congress may take some recognition of those 10,000 Indians who risked their lives for the American Government; that this Congress may do long-delayed justice by permitting those men to serve on the jury and to vote in each of the States of this Union. [Applause.]

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. DYER. Would the gentleman apply that same principle to all people who were under the flag of the United States who have not full rights of citizenship?

Mr. CARTER. I would not want to apply it to some of the aliens who are here, if that is what the gentleman has in mind.

Mr. DYER. I have reference especially to the people of Porto Rico. We have given to them what is said to be citizenship in the United States. Yet they are denied the privileges to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. CARTER. I have no sympathy with denying them privileges.

Mr. DYER. And we have some people in this country who are not permitted to sit on juries who are supposed to be citizens of the United States.

Mr. KNUTSON. May I suggest to the gentleman that the position of the gentleman from Oklahoma would probably be guided largely by what party the Porto Ricans would affiliate with?

Mr. DYER. We have in this country thousands of people who are citizens of the United States who are not permitted to serve on juries.

Mr. CARTER. One reservation I would make about people of that character would be that I would not want to commit myself to voting for any measure which would give citizenship to any class of citizens who might be a menace to the country in such a crisis as that through which we have just passed.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman refers to alien enemies.

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. DYER. Oh, I agree with that most heartily.

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. RHODES. I understood the gentleman to state that a large percentage of Indians had attained that degree of efficiency, had made such progress, that they were entitled to citizenship, and that they are denied that citizenship.

Mr. CARTER. Not in our State. In the State of Oklahoma every Indian man and woman has the full rights of citizenship—suffrage, jury service, and all. What my bill seeks to do is to extend that right to all Indians in every other State.

Mr. RHODES. What I wanted to ask particularly is this: Is it, or is it not, a fact that a large number of those Indians prefer to retain their tribal relations rather than assume the burdens of citizenship?

Mr. CARTER. Oh, there are practically no tribal relations. Tribal relations is a misnomer.

Mr. RHODES. Is it a fact that those Indians actually desire citizenship?

Mr. CARTER. They will all certainly welcome it when they thoroughly understand it. We had hearings on this citizenship bill before the Committee on Indian Affairs last year. A large majority of the Indians who appeared before the committee earnestly urged the passage of the bill. It is true one or two young fellows opposed the measure, but they did so through a misunderstanding of its terms. They feared that the Indians would be taxed. Under present conditions all restricted Indian lands are nontaxable, and these two young men were afraid some provision of this bill would bring their restricted lands upon the tax rolls. Let me say now that this bill specifically provides that all inalienable or restricted lands shall remain nontaxable. There is no reason why taxation should follow citizenship. This burden should accompany the right to alienate, and it is so provided from the terms of this measure.

Mr. MACCRATE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. I will.

Mr. MACCRATE. Does the gentleman's bill provide for the qualification of the members of this competency commission that they shall be Indians or white people?

Mr. CARTER. It provides that one man on each commission shall be an Indian.

Mr. MACCRATE. Under the present system what are the qualifications required for membership on the competency commissions?

Mr. CARTER. I will say to the gentleman there is no law authorizing a competency commission. That is provided out of an item that is carried in the Indian appropriation bill, a general item. There is some sort of a regulation for the appointment of competency commissions, and under that regulation they are appointed and they are paid out of this item, but there is no law which regulates their qualifications or anything else at the present time.

Mr. MACCRATE. Has he appointed Indians to do this work?

Mr. CARTER. I do not think he has appointed any Indians; that is, not in my part of the country. I will ask the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS]. Are there any Indians on the competency commission in northern Oklahoma?

Mr. HASTINGS. No.

Mr. CARTER. There are none in southern Oklahoma, but I have provided that one member of each commission must be an Indian, a man of Indian blood, and provided that one must be appointed from the Board of Indian Commissioners and that another must be appointed from civil service.

Mr. REED of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. I will.

Mr. REED of New York. How about title to the land after this bill passes and they become citizens? Can they then deal with their real estate as they see fit?

Mr. CARTER. No; under the present law they could if made citizens, but my bill proposes to change that and to make alienable and taxable only the lands of those of less than one-half Indian blood.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. I will.

Mr. LAYTON. How much of the $15,000,000 appropriation in this bill is for purely administrative purposes and how much goes directly to the Indian for food, clothing, and subsistence?

Mr. CARTER. There is very little that goes to the Indian for food and clothing. Practically all of it is for administrative purposes except that part of the Indian fund which is paid out on the Indian per capita.

Mr. LAYTON. Which belongs to the Indian?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. HAMILTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CARTER. I will.

Mr. HAMILTON. Why is it that the Indian appropriations are increasing when the number of Indians competent to manage their own affairs is presumably increasing?

Mr. LITTLE. That is the reason.

Mr. CARTER. That is a long and complicated story, but I will try to give a general explanation in as few words as possible. In the first place, it necessarily costs more as civilization and education progress. Therefore, as the Indian makes progress it necessarily involves additional expense to carry him on to a higher degree of civilization.

Second, more Indians are being taken in under the supervision of the bureau every year. To enlarge on this idea just briefly let us remember the fact that when the first Indian appropriation act passed Congress many years ago, as I now recall, it carried less than $10,000, to be used principally for investigation, and so forth. When the investigations were made some of these Indians were placed on reservations. It then became necessary to establish agencies on these reservations not only for civilization of the Indian but as a protection to the white settlers located nearby. Ultimately these Indians must be allotted on reservations, involving considerable expense for making up rolls, surveying of lands, filing of allotments, and so forth. After allotment the expenses continue to increase, for there must be the establishment of schools, of farm instructors, of hospitals, and other organizations for the protection of the Indian's health and civilization.

When it is remembered that this entire great Republic has been carved from the domain of the red man, and that he has been divested of title and ownership to a very large portion of his former holdings, certainly there must be no doubt of the obligation of the Federal Government to assist and help on to a self-sustaining status all Indians who are incompetent of self-support. But this policy should not be carried to the extent of bringing under the supervision of the bureau any class or tribe of Indians who have already been sufficiently civilized to support themselves in a fair and reasonable way. The progress of these matters has very naturally made large increases in appropriations necessary.

In my opinion the Federal Government has no business expending Treasury funds for the higher college education of individual Indians. When we have carried the young Indian of either sex through the common-school course, having given a general instruction in reading and writing in the English language, mathematics, geography, hygiene, and so forth; when we have given this individual substantial instruction in some kind of vocation or trade, my notion is that the obligation of the Federal Government, so far as gratuities from the Treasury are concerned, have been fully carried out.

If, however, these Indians have funds of their own with which to pursue the higher education, then our bureau might be justified in carrying them up still further by the expenditure of tribal funds.

Third, and very important, by no means are all competent Indians being released from supervision of the bureau. Little explanation is needed as to this third proposition. That is, the failure of the bureau to release Indians from supervision as soon as they become competent. Unless our Indian Bureau takes a more liberal view of this proposition, it is certainly the duty of this body to use the strong arm of Congress, to use a street expression, in "separating the sheep from the goats."

Again, in justice to our Interior Department and the Indian Bureau, let me commend the policy of establishing so-called competency commissions, the purpose of which is to place upon his own responsibility every Indian found to be competent. Again let me voice my earnest conviction that not a sufficient number of competency commissions to do this work are now on the job, and those that have been on the job have, in my humble judgment, not always taken a sufficiently liberal view of releasing the Indian; that is to say, the policy has resulted in releasing some competent Indians, but it has by no means been of large enough scope to fully accomplish the work. The very first duty should be to release from supervision every Indian found sufficiently competent to make his own way. When that is done we will not only require a less expenditure of money but we will permit those employed in the Indian Bureau to give better and closer supervision to the full-blood Indian, the incompetent Indian, who, when all is said and done, is the only real ward of the Federal Government. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. And in addition to the object named to be attained by this bill the gentleman neglected to state that the bureau has control of great sums of money——

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. And lands of large value, which makes it necessary for the bureau to hang on——

Mr. CARTER. Oh, well, that leads us into the discussion of another complicated subject, which I have already discussed and on which I think there is little disagreement between the gentleman from Washington and myself. Lands on the reservations can never be allotted to the acre. Therefore there is always some surplus land after allotments are completed. That land must be sold and proceeds placed in the general tribal fund. This, of course, requires supervision; but the money ought to be paid out per capita and distributed among the Indians, so that each will have funds to improve his allotment if he is a farmer, or enter into some other business activity if he is not an agriculturist. Let us proceed as expeditiously as possible in allotting the Indian and settling up his tribal estate. Let us capitalize his funds, give him what money is coming to him. Let him use it judiciously if he can, or spend it if he will. Let us not continue holding this competent fellow up by the arms so that his feet can not touch the ground. Even if he spends his money and is released from supervision, he will then get his feet on the ground, have a substantial basis from which to start, and, in my opinion, will make his own way. [Applause.]

Mr. EMERSON. There are some Indians who have property that can take care of it?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. EMERSON. And some squander it?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. EMERSON. How does he compare with the white man who has inherited money from a father who has died?

Mr. CARTER. I think such a comparison might be made without detriment to the Indian. Among those Indians who are educated and civilized there would perhaps be a smaller percentage who would squander their property than among the white men, because they have had better opportunity for education.

Mr. UPSHAW. Is there anything in this bill that will change that governmental circumlocution you talked about a while ago, by which an Indian could spend his money and become a free man?

Mr. CARTER. I am very glad the gentleman brought that up. There is an amendment to this very bill, proposed by my friend from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS] and myself, which gives to the Muskogee office final jurisdiction in the settlement of all these matters among the Five Civilized Tribes, except that an appeal may be taken within 60 days on any case. That would cut off some of the red tape and the necessity of going around the elbow to get to the mouth. But I really have some trepidation about it. I apprehend that some of our friends will not be satisfied and a point of order will be made against it. However, I hope not. It is good, substantial legislation, looking to progress, advancement, expedition, and economy, and gives ample protection to the Indians. It will inure to the improvement of the work and the service and cut off a lot of unnecessary labor and red tape. I hope the House will adopt it.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. BENJAMIN G. HUMPHREYS,

OF MISSISSIPPI.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, October 31, 1919.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include addresses in the room of the Speaker, Thursday, October 30, 1919, upon the occasion of the presentation to Maj. Gen. H. P. McCain of a silver pitcher and tray by the Members of the Senate and House of Representatives.

The addresses are as follows:

ADDRESSES DELIVERED IN THE ROOM OF THE SPEAKER, THURSDAY, OCTOBER 30, 1919, UPON THE OCCASION OF THE PRESENTATION TO MAJ. GEN. H. P. MCCAIN OF A SILVER PITCHER AND TRAY BY THE MEMBERS OF THE SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The following inscription was engraved on the silver tray:

"Presented to Major General H. P. McCain by his admirers in the Senate and House of Representatives of the Sixty-fifth Congress as an evidence of their high regard for him as a soldier and in appreciation of his great efficiency and uniform courtesy while he was the Adjutant General of the Army."

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Ladies and gentlemen, I have been asked by Mr. HUMPHREYS, of Mississippi, who has been the manager of ceremonies, to call this meeting to order and to introduce the speakers, which I am very glad to do. Speaker GILLETT sent me word to state that he would have been here himself to attend to the matter, but that he had been invited to a dinner with the King of the Belgians. Inasmuch as that is perhaps the last invitation he would ever get to dine with a king, of course he accepted and is absent [laughter]—and, by the way, I might say that the King is a very democratic man.

I think there is not a Member of the House and perhaps of the Senate, although I am not authorized to speak for the Senate at all, who does not feel under obligations to Gen. McCain and who does not entertain the most friendly feeling toward him. [Applause.] I will give it as my opinion publicly, as I have frequently done privately, that Gen. McCain is one of the most efficient men who were connected in any way, shape, form, or fashion with this war. I could transact more business with him in 5 minutes than with anyone else I knew in 20 minutes. He always knew what he knew, and he knew how to say it and get through with it.

While Gen. McCain is a great American, and this is America's day in a very general and large sense, in another sense it is Mississippi's day. Gen. McCain is from Mississippi. BEN HUMPHREYS, who was very active in getting up this testimonial, is a Mississippian, and the first speaker on this occasion, Senator CHAMBERLAIN, is a distinguished Mississippian. There is one thing that has always struck me about Mississippians, and that is how well they succeed when they get up North. [Laughter.] At one time they had three United States Senators from the extreme Northwest, and one of the most distinguished Congressmen who have served since I have been here—Gen. Black—was a Mississippian. At one time Mississippi had seven Senators, and so, without any further preliminaries, I introduce Senator CHAMBERLAIN, of Oregon, who during the war was chairman of the Senate Military Affairs Committee.

Senator CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. Chairman, it gives me great pleasure to participate in this presentation ceremony and to represent Gen. McCain's friends in the Senate. Gen. McCain, if I mistake not, entered the Military Academy at West Point in 1881 as an appointee of a then distinguished Member of the House of Representatives from Mississippi, and later one of her most distinguished Senators, Mr. H. D. Money. He went up to the academy as a raw Mississippi boy, as all of us are down there, like our good friends from Missouri, and soon distinguished himself in his classes, without any influential friends and without anything to aid him except his own inherent ability and energy. Upon graduation, Gen. McCain served in the line first as a second lieutenant in the Infantry, and then as a first lieutenant, and later as captain of Infantry, and in all of these places he made a name and a mark for himself as a most excellent soldier, and a gallant one to boot. When the Spanish-American War broke out, Gen. McCain was in Alaska with his command. He was one of the first of the expeditionary force that went to the Philippines. He rendered excellent service there as an officer of the line, and notwithstanding a very severe illness, which came very near taking him away, he recovered and performed a second tour of duty in the Philippines, acting, I believe, then in The Adjutant General's department under Gen. Wood in putting down the insurrections in the islands.

From 1900, when Gen. McCain went into the office of The Adjutant General, he performed almost entirely the duties pertaining to that corps, until August 26, 1918, when he was transferred to the line with the rank of major general. Gen. McCain, on his return from the Philippine Islands, stood a competitive examination with all of the captains in the Army and won over all a position in The Adjutant General's office, taking the rank of major, being appointed later as The Adjutant General of the Army, and he was holding that position in August, 1918, when he was transferred to the training camp at Camp Devens, I believe, as major general, commanding and training a division.

In whatever capacity Gen. McCain served he not only proved his efficiency, but he won the heart of everyone who had anything to do with him. [Applause.] When the Mexican embroglio occurred, Gen. McCain was occupying the position of Adjutant General, and it will be remembered that the whole Military Establishment was in a state of chaos. It became necessary to mobilize and federalize the National Guard of the several States and to arrange for a volunteer force, and it was Gen. McCain's energy and efficiency which enabled this work to be done, bringing it almost from a state of total unpreparedness to a state of splendid efficiency when the Army was finally demobilized.

I have been in intimate touch with Gen. McCain in his department since I came here in 1909, and I have had an opportunity to watch him as a soldier, as a citizen, and as a man. I have seen him stand at his desk from morning until night at the busiest time of the mobilization of our troops for the war which has just closed, and there was not a man, woman, or child who could not go to him at any hour of the day or night, ask him for information, and receive it, it being given cheerfully and always with a smile upon his face. [Applause.]

We usually think of a military man as a severe man, we think of a courageous man as an unapproachable man, but, my friends, Gen. McCain was neither severe nor unapproachable. There was no one who could not approach him and feel that, whatever he desired to know, the information would be imparted promptly and with chivalrous courtesy and kindness.

May I say that when he was transferred from The Adjutant General's department on the 26th day of August, 1918, to command a training division there was not a man in the Senate or in the House who did not feel a sense of shock at the change. I say that without questioning the purpose of the Military Establishment or the efficiency or ability of Gen. McCain's successor; but here was a man who had mobilized the Army of the United States for the Mexican border and had done it splendidly; here was a man who had been in The Adjutant General's department from 1900 until 1918, whose ability was conceded and acknowledged by everybody, transferred in a night to command a division, and everybody knew that that was not his particular line of duty. Some of us took the liberty of going to Gen. McCain—I among the rest—and suggesting to him that if his friends could do anything to keep him where he was and where he had performed such splendid service, they would be glad to do it; but like the true soldier and man he is, he said, "I am first a soldier, and whatever command I receive I obey." [Applause.] I do not think I am violating any secret when I say that so shocked was the Military Committee of the Senate at the transfer—not because we did not think he was able to do his full duty there, but because we felt he could render his best service to his country in The Adjutant General's office—that we called the Chief of Staff and the Secretary of War before the committee to ascertain why Gen. McCain had been transferred from the department which he had mastered and where he had rendered such splendid service to command a division at Camp Devens, and I am glad to be able to say to you gentlemen that both the Secretary of War and the Chief of Staff said that the change was not because of inefficiency, because he was recognized as one of the most efficient Adjutant Generals the Army ever had, but because they wanted a fighting man to train divisions, and Gen. McCain was a fighting man. [Applause.]

I have already spoken too long. I think it is well that we present Gen. McCain with this testimonial of our appreciation of his uniform courtesy and his general efficiency and the splendid service he has rendered to his country. I think it is proper that we "keep not our kisses for his dead, cold brow," but tell him what we think of him. We of the Senate join you of the House in making this presentation, and I feel I echo the sentiments of the Senate when I say it could not be made to a worthier man and a braver soldier nor to a more magnificent specimen of the citizenship of America. [Applause.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Ladies and gentlemen, anyone who would undertake to introduce Mr. Speaker CANNON to an American audience would be what Charley Edwards used to call a "plumb idiot." I suppose there is not a man or woman of the slightest intelligence in all the broad confines of the Republic who would not recognize him if you were to stand him up on a stump anywhere in the United States, and he deserves that great compliment. [Applause.] At one time there was a man named Dyer connected with the Senate in some capacity, I think as a reporter, away back before the war, who wrote a little book about as big as my hand and about as thick, that all of you gentlemen ought to read. He gave his personal intimate impressions about the bigwigs in the Senate. He tells of Webster and Clay and Calhoun and Jefferson Davis and Col. Benton and Gen. Cass and a number of others. It is a very interesting book. After eulogizing Senator Benton as a great man, he began to talk about his egotism. He said he was remarkably egotistical, but that it was not offensive; that he had grown into a great national institution. Now, Uncle JOE is not egotistical. I think he is a very modest man when you consider what he has done and what he has been through—still in the bloom of his youth and beauty [laughter]—but somehow he has almost ceased to be an individual in public esteem and he has become a great national institution. [Applause.] I present Mr. Speaker CANNON.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, the best thing that I could say perhaps could be said in a single sentence. I have listened to Senator CHAMBERLAIN, and I am sure that what I have to say would be better said than I can possibly say it in the few sentences I shall use later on if I were simply to say that I indorse every word that he said about Gen. McCain. Born in Mississippi—a great State wonderfully represented. All of the States have been wonderfully represented, and they all constitute the United States. But I say to the Mississippians you have not any monopoly in Gen. McCain. He belongs to the United States. [Applause.] I would rather have lived the life he has lived and performed the service to the Republic that he has performed than to have been Speaker of the House of Representatives, to have been a Member of the Senate, or to have had a four-years term as President of the United States.

The rank is but the guinea's stamp,
The man's the gowd for a' that.

I shall soon cross over—oh, not right away, if I get my way about it. [Laughter.] I would like to round out the century; I am not afraid to quit, but if these doctors are going to make you live 150 years I wish they would hurry up. [Laughter.]

Gen. McCain, the country appreciates your great service. History will do you full justice, but, after all, and I turn here to Mrs. McCain and your daughter, the Congress of the United States and the people of the country owe you something now, because when you are dead and gone and they are dead and gone, you will be dead, and while it is nice to dwell in history, as you will, yet some recognition of your great service, as I say, ought to be given by the people now.

That is about all I have to say. I never have spoken from a manuscript in my life. I have to catch at what I say, and I am always very glad if somebody will say something before I do, because it then gives me a little something to build on, to indorse or disagree with. [Laughter.]

Gen. McCain, in presenting you with this testimonial of our appreciation we honor most ourselves. [Applause.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Ladies and gentlemen, I present to you Gen. McCain. [Applause.]

Gen. McCAIN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I have been very fortunate in my service in the Army. I have received promotions and honors that I never dreamed of. I have been treated with courtesy and great consideration by everyone with whom I have done business. It was not hard for me to be agreeable and smile at my desk during the rush at the beginning of the Great War. At that time, as you gentlemen know, there was inevitable confusion, as must happen before the organization begins to function. You gentlemen had your troubles as Congressmen. In addition to that, you had requests of all sorts, from all sorts of people who had a right to expect that you would get them information and who called on you to do work outside of your duties as Congressmen. In doing that work naturally you would go to the War Department and to other bureaus. Those of you who did business with me would make requests, and a great deal of my time was taken up in trying to explain why the requests could not be granted. I laid the cards on the table. I gave all of the information that I had. I am not conscious of ever having withheld any information. I thought you were all entitled to it, and when I did that, no matter what the decision was, I found every one of you acquiescing cheerfully and willingly. You were willing to cooperate with me and to support me in any decision of the kind that was made. So it is always with an American. You can deny his requests, you can turn him down, but if you will tell him why, and give him a man's explanation, he will accept it. [Applause.] You gentlemen treated me with so much courtesy and consideration that it was no trouble for me to be courteous.

For that courtesy and consideration and for this magnificent testimonial my heart is full of gratitude. [Applause.]

Ours Is a Government of, for, and by All the People. It Is a Government of Law and Order. It Does Not Tolerate Anarchy.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. THOMAS L. BLANTON,

OF TEXAS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, October 31, 1919,

On Senate concurrent resolution 15.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, were I a woman I could with proverbial accuracy now exclaim, "Oh, yes; I told you so." For during a period of over two years, without cessation, I have earnestly preached from the floor of this House the fact that the labor unions of our land were not controlled by the thousands of honest, law-abiding, deserving, loyal Americans belonging to such organizations, but were dominated by selfish, autocratic, lawless, anarchistic leaders who sought not to help the laborers of the country but to destroy our Government and establish in its place a minority class rule by force, terror, and violence known in Bolshevik Russia as a soviet.

Warning after warning have I given you, my colleagues, urging that definite action be taken in time to protect our 110,000,000 people from suffering and calamity.

While the Congress has "hollered" against the high cost of living, we have permitted for months the strike of the longshoremen and expressmen of New York to continue, with laws violated and laborers seeking the privilege of working violently attacked by strikers, and even killed, resulting in thousands of tons of priceless food rotting and wasting for want of laborers to handle it, with thousands of men refusing to work and refusing to permit others to work who wanted to work.

For six weeks now we have permitted to flourish the steel strike, precipitated, urged, and led by the anarchist, William Z. Foster, who, not only from the stump in years past but likewise in phamphlets and books written and published by him, has preached and arrogantly advocated not only I. W. W.ism, disregard of all laws, and anarchy, but also bloody revolution and the overthrow by force of our beloved Republic.

The people of the United States were astounded by the evidence of the I. W. W.'s attorney, Jacob Margolis, of Pittsburgh, Pa., given in the Senate hearing the other day, showing his cooperative working hand in hand with said William Z. Foster, whose present leadership of the steel strikers was specially arranged and approved by Mr. Samuel Gompers and the American Federation of Labor, both approving both the man and his conduct with respect to said strike. It has been against the autocratic domination of labor unions by such anarchistic leaders I have preached, and not against labor unions organized for proper, lawful purposes. I have been endeavoring to protect the laborers of our land against their own worst enemies within their own households seeking to lead them to everlasting destruction.

Concerning the threatened coal strike, when to-night 400,000 miners are to quit work in an attempt to starve and freeze 110,000,000 people, these miners are under solemn contract with the mine operators to continue work under existing conditions until the war is over, but not to extend beyond March 16, 1920. The war is not over, and will not be over until the peace treaty is ratified and peace is proclaimed by the President. We have soldiers still on duty, who enlisted for the duration of the war, not only in England, France, and Germany but also in far-away Russia, and our men are still on duty in active service on the high seas, who likewise enlisted only for the duration of the war, and who, though clamoring in vain for their releases, are still held to duty. They must all have food, clothing, fuel, arms, and ammunition.

Now, what are these miners earning at this time? Last Monday the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODS] placed a statement in the RECORD—page 7589—showing that the monthly wages paid to certain named miners by the Borderland Coal Corporation, at Borderland, W. Va., in 1918 ranged from $257.92 to $547.82, and during this year up to October 1, 1919, such monthly wages ranged from $253.60 to $301.60. He also showed that during the time above stated there was paid to said miners named, after deducting all their bills for house rent, groceries, store accounts, lights, coal, doctors' bills, and insurance, net amounts ranging from $112.37 to $412.57 per month. Of course, it is presumed that the above miners earned more than the general average, but certainly the ones named are not suffering.

Yet through their autocratic leader, John L. Lewis, who has ignored, defied, and denounced the President of the United States, 400,000 miners are now demanding a flat increase in wages not of 5 or 10 or 15 per cent but an increase of 60 per cent, and in addition they demand that they shall work only six hours per day and only five days per week, and yet be paid for a full day's work and for a full week's work. This demand is absurdly ridiculous. Every grown human being on earth in good health should work eight hours per day and six days per week.

The President of the United States has denominated this strike as unfounded and unlawful. But he is not the only one who so designates it. The President has been the laborers' best friend. He has been a friend to the miners. He appointed as a member of his Cabinet the Secretary of Labor from the official family of the miners' union. But we find a man closer still to the miners who denounces this strike. In the center of the front page of the Pittsburgh Post, Wednesday, October 29, 1919, from Charleston, W. Va., the former president of the United Mine Workers of America, Tom L. Lewis, declared that this proposed strike is inconsistent with the policies of the union and a crime against the people and the union.

Yet the present president of said United Mine Workers, John L. Lewis, who has ordered these 400,000 men to quit work to-night, has violently denounced the President of the United States because he has assured the people he will enforce the law. And the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING] endeavored to print in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to-day this harsh denunciation of the President, and when I prevented his publishing the same by objecting to it, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING] very unkindly asserted that I was in favor of hanging all laborers as high as Haman. As a matter of fact, I was sent to Congress by the votes of laborers. I have been their co-laborer and friend during the 47 years of my life. I am for them when they are right, but against their leaders when they are wrong. The only ones I advocate hanging as high as Haman are the anarchistic leaders who preach bloody revolution and the overthrow of the Government by force, and even then I want them hung by law. What I want is a law that would authorize their hanging. We hang a man for murdering another. Why should not we hang a man who tries to murder thousands of innocent women and little children in an attempt by force to overthrow an established Government of law and order?

And because I have opposed what I have considered to be unreasonable demands of various labor unions and autocratic leaders, both with respect to increased wages during war time and their demand for beer and saloons, the editor of the Washington Times, Mr. Arthur Brisbane, permitted his paper to print on its front page not long ago my picture, accompanied by the statement that I was "the meanest man and opposed to all unions." It will be remembered that concerning this editor, Mr. Arthur Brisbane, Hon. A. Mitchell Palmer, then Custodian of Alien Property, but now Attorney General of the United States, on September 14, 1918, stated:

> The facts will soon appear which will conclusively show that 12 or 15 German brewers of America, in association with the United States Brewers' Association, furnished the money, amounting to several hundred thousand dollars, to buy a great newspaper in one of the chief cities of the Nation, and its publisher, without disclosing whose money had bought that organ of public opinion, in the very Capital of the Nation, in the shadow of the Capitol itself, has been fighting the battle of the liquor traffic.

And on page 742 of the printed hearings before the Senate Subcommittee on the Judiciary, Mr. Arthur Brisbane testified that he had borrowed $375,000 in cash from Mr. Feigenspan (a brewer) without interest or bankable security, to buy the Washington Times. It is well known that I am the only Representative from Texas who in either the Sixty-fifth or Sixty-sixth Congresses made a speech on the floor of the House in favor of national prohibition. Could this not be the reason why Mr. Arthur Brisbane's Washington Times designates me as "the meanest man" and not the fight I have made against autocratic labor leaders' demands?

Never in my whole life have I opposed labor unions organized for lawful purposes. No man is a truer friend to laborers than I am. I began earning my own living and helping to support orphaned brothers and sisters when I was only 10 years old. I know what it means to earn daily bread by the sweat of the brow. I have always fought against the unreasonable, autocratic demands of labor leaders and the disregard of law and anarchy advocated by them, and will continue to fight same as long as I live. I have been abused and unjustly vilified in Congress by men speaking in the name of organized labor, but some day the honest, loyal laborers of our land will realize that after all I have been their true friend and have risked my life many times to save them from their own worst enemies.

OF
HON. OSCAR E. KELLER,
OF MINNESOTA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, October 31, 1919,

On Senate concurrent resolution 15.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, in the speeches just delivered the Members of the House claim they champion the cause of the common people. But what have they done for the common people? You have been in session here since early in May—several months—and you have not raised a hand to help the common people in reducing the high cost of living. The people whom you represent and claim you will defend are the ones who are being preyed upon by the profiteer by reason of the wholesale exportation of the necessaries of life. The real reason for the threatened strike is the high cost of existence, and the working class for whom you are speaking are those who are directly affected by the mounting costs of foodstuffs. The costs of necessaries of life have been increased so tremendously that it is no longer the question of the high cost of living, but the high cost of existence. And the people whom you claim have not been heard from will be heard from later on. All you have to do is to make a few investigations to secure the desired information, and this may be secured without much effort in the State of Minnesota, in which State I have the honor of being a resident. The reason why you have not heard from the common people is because they are not organized and have no voice, except through their Representative in Congress. The high cost of living can be reduced, and several weeks ago I introduced a joint resolution providing for an embargo on foodstuffs, which, if enacted into law, will be a remedy for this distressing condition of affairs. If this resolution had been acted upon promptly, as it should have been, I am sure that the people would now feel confident that Congress is really interested in doing something for them.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and there it lies without any action having been taken thereon. Why has it not been acted upon? Have we any legislation of greater importance to the common people than that which will curb the evil which now confronts us? The poor people can not exist on promises, but they will make great sacrifices if they can get assurance that we are endeavoring to help them. Do they have that assurance from what this Congress has been doing?

What I have just said should not be overlooked by the minority Members of this Congress, as the present administration has had the reins of Government for several years, and when they were called upon to reduce the high cost of living, which they had promised to do, they claimed there were not sufficient laws upon the statute books with which to deal with the problem. Why did they not enact sufficient laws during the years they had control of Congress? Has this menace just been born; is it new to them; did not they ever hear about it until this Congress was called into extraordinary session last May? Why did not the minority party make an effort to do something during the present session. It is apparent to me, from a close study of their well-prepared remarks during the past few weeks, that they are endeavoring to "pass the buck" to the Republicans, and the Republicans are in a very polite and diplomatic manner endeavoring to "slip" it along to the present administration.

The present administration has been promising for a long time to remedy the condition and reduce the living costs, but thus far they have done nothing but amend their promises. They may have been sincere in their promises and felt they knew how to get at the root of the evil by prosecuting the profiteers and having released from cold storage many tons of foodstuffs. They started in the right direction but did not accomplish anything. Why? Just as soon as the foodstuffs were released they were immediately exported, and this will have a tendency to increase prices still more during the nonproductive season of the year—in the cold of the winter.

It is not too late yet to make an effort to do something for our people. Let us lay politics to one side for the time being and unite our efforts with the single thought in mind of doing that which will remedy the present alarming condition.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. L. S. ECHOLS,
OF WEST VIRGINIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, October 31, 1919,

On Senate concurrent resolution 15.

Mr. ECHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I represent one of the largest coal-producing districts in the country. Most of the miners in my district are union miners, but, above all else, they are loyal Americans. If this strike were left to a vote of the miners of my district, in my judgment it would fail by at least 75 per cent of the American citizens entitled to a vote thereon. I make that statement upon information from reliable sources. It has been brought out in the discussion of this resolution that the miners were wrong in their demands. Let me call the attention of the House to the fact that the miners throughout the country have not expressed themselves either for or against the strike called to take place at 12 o'clock to-night. No opportunity has been given them to express their sentiments in this matter. I know the conditions and difficulties under which the miner lives. I would not throw one thing in the way of the miner in his efforts to obtain better living conditions or better pay when circumstances justify his demands; but organizations of whatever nature, or captains of industry, however powerful, in their requests or demands which have to do with the production of the country should take into consideration the rights and interests of the general public. That general public is the most vitally interested party in this gigantic struggle. Neither the miner, the operator, nor the Congress can evade the responsibility to the people who will suffer most seriously in this crisis.

The world is somewhat upside down. The strike, if it comes to a test, will make this unhappy condition worse than it now is. The communists and the agitators throughout the country are happy, indeed, when opportunity presents itself for them to vent their pent-up hatred upon a distressed world.

I would be unfaithful to the trust reposed in me if I did not support this resolution. It does nothing more and nothing less than pledge the support of the Congress to the President of the United States in his efforts to uphold the dignity and the majesty of the law. Could any American citizen, whether he be a miner or a Member of Congress, do otherwise? Whenever and wherever law and order have failed, chaos and anarchy have followed.

The strike can not materially succeed because in its very inception there was wrong—wrong in the extreme demands of the Cleveland conference—that could not under any circumstances be met without stupendous injustice and tremendous burdens upon the general public throughout the land. The demands were so extreme as to shock the country. The commerce of the country, the transportation of food, of material used in the employment of other labor, are dependent upon coal. Not only the coal miner is required now to work and live under strenuous and adverse circumstances, but the rest of the world is in the same condition; and therefore for a mere handful of would-be leaders in the miners' organization, without any authority from the miners themselves, to throw this tremendous burden upon the people is without justification.

This strike can not succeed for another reason, and that is it lacks the support of the American people. I believe this resolution will pass this House without a single dissenting vote. We only represent the sentiment of the people generally throughout the land. No cause that does not have the support of the American people can succeed in a country like ours.

The liberty of the people depends upon law enforcement, and no liberty is worth the having unless it is under the protection of the law; and in my support of this resolution I do nothing except pledge my efforts in upholding the rights of those who are entitled under any and all circumstances to protection. There has been no time since the Civil War that the destinies of this country have been so endangered as they are to-day, and there has been no time in the history of this country from the adoption of the Constitution to this good day that Congress stood with such unanimity upon one side of any great question. This within itself ought to be sufficient to convince those who are undertaking by force to secure their demands that their cause is not justifiable and can not succeed.

Against Revolutionary Forces Which Would Disrupt Our Country.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ALBERT JOHNSON,
OF WASHINGTON,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, October 31, 1919.

On Senate concurrent resolution 15.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The resolution adopted by the Senate and now before the House reads as follows:

Whereas the enforcement of the law and the maintenance of order for the security of life and property and the protection of the individual citizen in the exercise of his constitutional rights is the first and paramount duty of the Government and must be at all times vigorously and effectively safeguarded by the use of every means essential to that end; Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That we hereby give the national administration and all others in authority the assurance of our constant, continuous, and unqualified support in the use of such constitutional and lawful means as may be necessary to meet the present industrial emergency and in vindicating the majesty and power of the Government in enforcing obedience to and respect for the Constitution and the laws, and in fully protecting every citizen in the maintenance and exercise of his lawful rights and the observance of his lawful obligations.

Mr. Speaker, on such a resolution there can be no division. The resolution amounts to a reaffirmation of the oath of allegiance. The resolution is in support of the Government.

Mr. Speaker, seven years ago I became a candidate for Congress. On Saturday, August 10, 1912, I put forth a platform which embraced the platform of the Republican Party and two planks of my own. These were as follows:

1. "I favor a rigid restriction of immigration."

2. "I believe in the right of labor to organize, to strike, and to strive continually for better conditions. I am, however, unalterably opposed to the idea of 'one big union,' and to the revolutionary tactics which would first of all destroy and even now is jeopardizing labor unions. I contend that the church, the family, and organized labor must unite at once against the scheming forces who are striving might and main to disrupt every free institution that has brought the United States to the proud position that it holds among the nations of the world."

Mr. Speaker, that plank was in the nature of a prophecy. Events have borne out the fears held by me at that time. I stand on those planks now as then. Labor has the right to organize. Labor has the right to strike. But a revolution must not be engineered through the ranks of labor or through the ranks of any part of the people under the flag of this Government. It makes no difference whether they are union or nonunion, aliens, naturalized, or native citizens, in high places or in low places.

Mr. Speaker, I hope to be a candidate for nomination and reelection to Congress. I shall stand on the planks I have read and on the vote which I shall cast for this resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I extend these remarks on the permission granted through the request of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

The Public and the Labor Unions.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CLIFTON N. McARTHUR, OF OREGON,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, October 31, 1919.

Mr. McARTHUR. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted me to extend my remarks, I wish to print in the RECORD the following editorial from the Morning Oregonian of October 24:

THE PUBLIC AND LABOR UNIONS.

Samuel Gompers can not mislead the American people by the pretense that refusal of the industrial conference to accept the labor federation's definition of collective bargaining is a declaration of war on the principle of labor unionism. Nor can he intimidate the people by declaring war on behalf of that definition. The industrial conference had to consider something of more pressing importance than the question whether an employer ought to bargain collectively with representatives of his own employees only or with representatives of a union composed of all employees in his entire industry. That is a debatable question. But the conference had to deal with the self-evident fact, proved by a number of glaring examples, that organized labor breaks bargains and is too much in the hands of men who make bargains with the intention of breaking them—men who deliberately aim to destroy the present industrial system with the deliberate, avowed purpose of wrecking it and of constructing a communist, soviet system out of the ruins.

A bargain, collective or otherwise, presupposes an honest purpose of the parties to observe its terms. It implies responsibility of the agents making it for its observance by those whom they represent. It precludes any suggestion of force or compulsion by one party to bring the other to his terms. Mr. Gompers and his associates have gone far to destroy their credit as parties with whom a bargain should be made, because their acts do not square with these conditions. Employers may fairly maintain that it is folly to make a bargain with men who, they know beforehand, will not keep it. Still greater folly would it be to make a bargain with men whose purpose is to break it and by successive new demands to ruin the employer and take possession of his property. Past, present, and coming events prove that these are the conditions with which American industry has to deal.

New York printers have a contract under which they work for a certain period at agreed terms. They violate it by taking a "vacation." New York longshoremen, who were paid 33 cents an hour in 1914, are now paid 65 cents. They demand $1 and agree to abide by the decision of the national adjustment commission of the Shipping Board. The board awards them 70 cents and reminds them that, "as wages have gone up, productiveness has gone down." It promises to consider "a material improvement in the performance of the men as a warrant for an increase of pay" in addition to that awarded. They strike in contempt of their agreement and in defiance of their leaders. When T. V. O'Connor, president of their union, declares the strike ended and appeals to them to go back to work, they mob him, fire on him, and he has to be rescued by the police.

A new union of steel workers was formed by William Z. Foster, an American, who has written extreme I. W. W. pamphlets and whose methods were to promote revolution by "boring from within" the unions which the I. W. W. seeks to destroy. He professes to have abandoned his radical beliefs, yet he continues in close communion with Jacob Margolis, who frankly and boastfully tells a Senate committee that he is an "anarchist syndicalist" and that Foster came to him for help in organizing the strike. He secured the indorsement of the I. W. W. and of the "union of Russian workmen" which has been formed in the United States for revolutionary ends. This man describes the Plumb plan of railroad operation as the "first step toward the new future" and the soviet government of Russia as "the most forward-looking creation on the globe, far better than anything in America." The steel strike was first opposed, then adopted, by the American Federation of Labor, the moderate leaders of which were pushed on by the radicals.

Emboldened by their success in coercing Congress three years ago, the railroad brotherhoods present the Plumb plan, under which the railroads would be bought and owned by the Government and operated by the employees in conjunction with the managers, and they threaten to strike unless it is adopted. Thus a soviet would practically control the railroads, for the executives would have small voice in management, with the threat of a strike constantly held over their heads. That scheme was indorsed by the federation.

The coal industry presents the most successful example of collective bargaining on a large scale in this country. The United Mine Workers are working under a contract which does not expire till March, 1920, but that union presents to the operators in the shape of an ultimatum demands for a 60 per cent advance in wages, a six-hour day, five days' work a week, to take effect November 1, under threat of a general strike.

It is unions which do such things as these with which employers refuse to consider collective bargains. They refuse to deal with unions which break bargains or which have fallen into the power of revolutionists who aim to destroy the American Republic and set up the minority rule of a soviet founded on force. Occasionally the honest, loyal American officers of a union, like the courageous O'Connor, order their striking, contract-breaking members back to work, but often—too often—the unions yield to the radicals and are in their power. The officers of the federation yield also, when honor and conviction demand that they make a stand for American principles, among which fidelity to contracts, resistance to revolution, and rule by the majority stand first.

The American people struggled for a quarter of a century to bring capital into subjection to the rights of the public. They have defeated the efforts of capital to dictate. They now face an effort at dictation in the name of labor, which is as contemptuous of the rights of the public as capital was formerly. The spirit of the oft-quoted "public-be-damned" epigram is just as apparent in the present conduct of labor as it was formerly in that of capital. The public is just as determined not to be damned by labor as it was not to be damned by capital. When labor comes with a threat to tie up the railroads, to extinguish the steel furnaces, and to cut off the fuel supply with winter at hand unless its demands are conceded, the people recognize it as an attempt to hold up the United States, and they will fight.

In taking this attitude the people do not oppose labor unions as such; they oppose only a leadership with revolutionary aims and contempt of contracts. They are no more desirous of breaking up organizations of labor than they were of breaking up corporations when capital became arrogant. The unions fill a necessary, useful place in the community and are needed especially to restrain greedy, tyrannical, reactionary employers. If the employers' delegates in the industrial conference imagine that the present temper of the public assures them support in a campaign to destroy unionism, they err as grievously as do the radical labor leaders who are now running amuck. The public desires the unions to purge themselves of their revolutionary, irresponsible leaders, to renounce those purposes which are destructive to industry, to recognize the sanctity of contracts and the rights of the public. Subject to these conditions, the people desire the unions to live and grow strong, that they may serve labor more effectually than they now do. The protest is against the effort of any class, any minority, to ride roughshod over the whole Nation in assertion of its pretended rights and in contempt of the rights of the majority. Within those limitations there is abundant room for the activity of labor unions.

Safeguarding Constitutional Government.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ISRAEL M. FOSTER,
OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, October 31, 1919.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, the resolution which has been unanimously approved by the Senate and which is now before the House reads as follows:

Senate concurrent resolution 15.

Whereas the enforcement of the law and the maintenance of order for the security of life and property and the protection of the individual citizen in the exercise of his constitutional rights is the first and paramount duty of the Government and must be at all times vigorously and effectively safeguarded by the use of every means essential to that end: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That we hereby give the national administration and all others in authority the assurance of our constant, continuous, and unqualified support in the use of such constitutional and lawful means as may be necessary to meet the present industrial emergency and in vindicating the majesty and power of the Government in enforcing obedience to and respect for the Constitution and the laws, and in fully protecting every citizen in the maintenance and exercise of his lawful rights and the observance of his lawful obligations.

This resolution has been inspired by the bituminous coal strike scheduled to go into effect to-night at midnight. A reading of the resolution will show that its purpose is that of a declaration by the legislative branch of our Government calculated to advise the public that we are in favor of "enforcement of law" and "maintenance of order," for the "security of life and property," and, further, that we are in favor of the protection of the individual citizen in the exercise of his constitutional rights under our Government.

It is not the purpose of this resolution to pass upon the merits of the present controversy between the miners and the operators. Indeed, the President in his statement on the coal strike, issued on October 25, begins the last paragraph with the following sentence: "I express no opinion on the merits of the controversy." The President, in referring to the Indianapolis proceedings, says "they were not only unjustifiable but unlawful * * * and wrong, both morally and legally." This from the head of our Government, and after investigation and deliberation. I mention this not to detract in the least from the proposed effectiveness of this resolution, which will, doubtless, have the unanimous support of all Members of this House. No man is worthy a seat in this House unless he is willing to fairly meet any issue involving the stability of his Government. This is no time to dodge. Should our people ever reach the point where the majesty of our laws and the power of our Government were no longer respected, then, indeed, will they be on the road to rapid ruin. The merits of the controversy between the miners and the operators may be and should be disassociated from the merits of a resolution such as this, the purpose of which is to affirm and pledge our loyalty to the fundamental principles of our Government.

I represent a district which is one of the largest producers of bituminous coal in the country. It has 325 coal mines and produces annually 10,000,000 tons of coal. I have spent my entire life in a county composed in part of coal miners. I believe I have some knowledge of their manner of life and their mental traits. As I have listened to the remarks of various Members of the House concerning coal mining and coal miners I have been impressed with the belief that there is yet much ignorance in the House concerning them. What I am saying is aside from the merits of the present controversy, but is due a class of loyal and patriotic Americans, residents of my district, who may be at times greatly misunderstood. Will you pardon a reference to my home county, in Ohio? At the outbreak of the recent war we first sought to raise $100,000 for a "war chest." The resolution to raise this sum had scarcely been passed until the coal miners alone in our county subscribed over $140,000 for this purpose, and this impetus caused our "war chest" to finally total over $400,000. I mention this incident because it is typical of the promptness with which this class of Americans throughout my district responded to all patriotic movements. Their attitude concerning the several Liberty loans as well as war savings stamps was in line with their action concerning the "war chest." The local union at one mine in that county embraced a number of musicians who organized a band of 15 pieces, and nine of these men volunteered at our entrance into the war. I know such instances are typical of the course pursued throughout bituminous coal-mining sections of my entire district. I am not making these statements merely for the purpose of having them read at home, but I make them because the coal miners in southeastern Ohio are entitled to have you gentlemen in the House more correctly understand the patriotism which has governed them throughout this world crisis; and our coal operators were none the less loyal and patriotic.

Furthermore, I believe there is an erroneous impression on the part of some as to the amount of wages per year a miner receives. While our miners may receive a large wage during the work periods, yet my observation in Ohio has been that in normal times the miner who works every day there is work will average, per year, barely enough to raise his family in comfort and educate his children. Work is not continuous; suspensions are occasional. I was prosecuting attorney for eight years during a period ending some eight years ago. Of course, wages then were not as high as now. While prosecuting attorney I conducted an impartial investigation by our grand jury, seeking to determine the average pay per working-day of our miners covering a three-year period. We investigated both the miners' and the operators' records from the district and State offices, calling before us officials of each side, and found, to our surprise, that for that full three-year period the miner who had worked every day there was work would have averaged $1.05 per working-day for that entire period. I am not contending that that would be the average wage to-day, because wages are much higher, but I do invite your attention to a fair consideration of the undisputed fact that the miner who works every day he can get work must necessarily lie idle a part of each year. This has been the condition in southeastern Ohio.

I have no desire at this time to go into the merits of this present controversy. I am not trying to point out in what respects the coal operators are right or wrong or in what respects the coal miners are right or wrong. These remarks have been invited because some gentlemen in discussing this resolution have left the impression that they believe all bituminous miners could work every working-day in the year if they cared to and that they get a fabulous sum for such work. In refuting these conclusions I am but doing what I am sure any operator in southeastern Ohio knows is due from the facts. I am not trying to incite miners to strike or to violate any law. I hope for a speedy settlement. My sole desire in making these remarks is that the House of Representatives, during a crisis like the one that is immediately upon us, may be fair, calm, and judicial in an honest attempt to arrive at the facts with a sincere desire to see that exact justice is done all parties to the dispute; and, above all, we must not waver in our protection to the 100,000,000 Americans who are not direct parties to this controversy. They have their right to live and to utilize the actual necessities of life. Their rights and interests should be, and must be, considered as paramount to the interests of both the coal miners and the coal operators. Let us do all in our power to safeguard the fundamentals of our constitutional Government. Let us do it promptly and unanimously. This is no time for partisanship; we must all be nothing but Americans.

The West Virginia Coal Miners.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WELLS GOODYKOONTZ,
OF WEST VIRGINIA,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, November 1, 1919,

On Senate concurrent resolution 15.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Mr. Speaker, the matter now before us for consideration is a measure reading thus:

Senate concurrent resolution 15.

Whereas the enforcement of the law and the maintenance of order for the security of life and property and the protection of the individual citizen in the exercise of his constitutional rights is the first and paramount duty of the Government and must be at all times vigorously and effectively safeguarded by the use of every means essential to that end: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That we hereby give the national administration and all others in authority the assurance of our constant, continuous, and unqualified support in the use of such constitutional and lawful means as may be necessary to meet the present industrial emergency and in vindicating the majesty and power of the Government in enforcing obedience to and respect for the Constitution and the laws, and in fully protecting every citizen in the maintenance and exercise of his lawful rights and the observance of his lawful obligations.

The resolution I have just read has passed the Senate, and I trust will pass this House, by the unanimous voice of its Members. The measure and the necessity for its adoption have grown out of the call for a nation-wide strike of the coal miners of the country. The object sought to be attained in the service of notice upon those instigating the trouble that the representatives of the people without regard to party affiliations stand as a unit in their support of the Government in its determined plan to protect society at whatever cost.

The President has characterized the Indianapolis proceeding as "not only unjustifiable, but unlawful * * * and wrong, both morally and legally." This indictment comes from the head of the Nation, under the responsibility of his great office, after thorough investigation and mature deliberation. The arguments of coal operators and coal miners are one thing, but the voice of the President, speaking for the Government, and that is the say for all the people, is quite a different thing. That the strike is unlawful is not open to debate. The controversy arose in this way: From the union standpoint the country is divided up into districts or fields. What is known as the central competitive district comprises one of these districts or fields. Its jurisdiction covers Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, and western Pennsylvania. Notwithstanding the contract between the union and the operators in this territory was not to expire until the ending of the war, which will not take place until the treaty of peace has been ratified and the President has issued his proclamation—I say, notwithstanding this, the union officials declared the contract would be ended on November 1, and invited the operators of that field to meet them at Buffalo to agree upon a new wage scale. Being unable to agree, they adjourned this meeting to Philadelphia, where they were still unable to come to terms, and thereupon the strike was called, not limited to the central competitive district—Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, and western Pennsylvania—but nation-wide, covering a dozen other States, affecting thousands of miners and operators who had never been consulted and whose voice had never been heard. In West Virginia certain of the fields are union and others are nonunion, but neither the union nor the nonunion were give an opportunity to be heard. In the union fields there are existing contracts, binding upon operators and miners alike, undisputed contracts, some of which will not expire until April 1, 1920, yet the Indianapolis officials paid no more attention to these covenants than did the Germans to their treaty obligations with the Belgians.

I confidently say that not one out of ten of the miners of West Virginia approves of this strike. They have not been consulted. As honorable men they do not want their contracts abrogated, much less repudiated. They are for the fulfillment of their contracts. The remaining 10 per cent of the miners represent, largely, those who have been sent into the State as walking delegates and agitators to stir up strife and disorder and bring discord and distress among the men, who happen to have a favored lot, mining thick seams of coal under genial surroundings, at wages, in some cases, higher than the union scale.

Our miners should be let alone, and the efforts of the Indianapolis leaders, acting without authority and as repudiationists, to corrupt them with the $15,000,000 campaign fund, should be resisted with all the just and lawful power of the Federal Government, reinforced by a wholesome public opinion.

Unionism in this country, speaking in general, is honorable, and their contracts are held inviolate, but an outlaw union here and there will be found, just as is the case with men individually and as forming other human societies.

The terms which the Indianapolis leaders seek to foist on the operators at the expense of the public are truly remarkable. Five days a week, six hours a day, 60 per cent increase. A proposition of this character is a blow to the principle of collective bargaining. It makes employers shrink for fear of the exertion of power by great numbers and it tends to embitter and render hostile those friends of union labor who have stood by it and seen it grow in power and influence to its present great position in the affairs of men.

Before concluding these remarks I wish to advert to another phase of the proposition. On last Wednesday a distinguished Member of this body, representing an organized mining constituency in the State of Indiana, in a very able address before this body, in graphic language, described the terrible conditions under which the coal miners of that State managed to exist. The gentleman tells us that the miner is routed out before day; that when he comes from the mine he is all wet and his body is "black with grease and grime"; that he "contracts cold, pneumonia, and consumption" on account of exposure to inclement weather; that he has seen miners pass his door with their "clothes frozen to their bodies to the extent that they rattled when they walked"; that they work in water half knee-deep; "in low coal where they have to double up like a jackknife"; that they are in constant danger of "electrocution and drowning."

That such conditions should exist in the State of Indiana, the State that produced Harrison and Hendricks and Voorhees, is a reproach and a disgrace to that great State. The fact that rational human beings would work under such conditions, when labor is in so much demand in other departments of industry, passes all understanding; that humane societies and charitable organizations of that State do not come to the relief of these unfortunate people does not speak well for these societies and organizations. It would seem that the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals might take cognizance of the situation, even were it necessary to change their by-laws, in order to render relief in the premises.

Turning from the dark and dismal picture of the abject men and dreary conditions under which they work in the State of Indiana, of which Indianapolis is the capital, as represented by our fellow Member, possessed of intimate knowledge of such conditions and knowing fully whereof he speaks, I know it will give you pleasure to learn that in the great State of West Virginia the conditions are just to the opposite.

In West Virginia the miner is the most happy and independent of all our citizenry. He is not routed out before day, but goes into and comes from the mines at reasonable times, and usually at his own volition. It is true that when he comes out of the mines he is covered with coal dust, but he immediately goes to the bathhouse, where he is provided with hot showers and soap, and after cleaning himself he places his working clothes in his locker and puts on clothes as clean and neat and comfortable as those worn by the average professional and business man. West Virginia miners do not generally wear custom-made clothes; their suits, as a rule, are made to measure by a tailor. Our miners are healthy and one of the circumstances often commented upon is that they are not subject to consumption and like diseases supposed to be due to the fact that there is a slight amount of sulphur in the coal dust which is to be found in the mines. West Virginia miners are not exposed to inclement weather. Their working places under the earth are cool in summer and warm in winter. Electric fans furnish them with a constant supply of wholesome fresh air which circulates through every entry, air course, and working place. Such a thing as a miner wearing frozen clothes, rattling like dry bones, has never been heard of in West Virginia. Our miners are too self-respecting to submit to any such indignity. Our mine laws require proper drainage of mines where water exists, which is rarely the case, and therefore our miners do not work in water half knee-deep; our miners have too much sense to allow themselves to be imposed upon in any such way, and our operators would not tolerate any such absurd condition. Our Indiana friend tells us that the miners of that State have to work in low coal, "all doubled up like a jackknife." Fortunately, in West Virginia the situation is different. The coal seams will average about 6 feet in thickness, and the miner, therefore, can stand erect. Certain of the coals—the coking coals—are soft and mine easily. Loaders frequently make from $10 to $12 per day. I was told by a mining engineer in McDowell County, W. Va., of a record case of a miner who loaded in one day sufficient coal to earn for himself $20, and this without assistance of back hand or helper. Some of our mines are electrically illuminated, as much so as the streets of this city.

The great majority of our miners are a happy and contented people. They are a churchgoing people. They educate their children. Their homes are comfortable with plastered rooms and provided with bath and hot and cold water, electrically lighted, and with yard and garden. Rents are cheap; no increase since the war.

Places of recreation, such as clubhouses and playgrounds for the children, are provided. Trained nurses are frequently provided by the operators for those who happen to become sick. Workmen's compensation is provided by the State at the entire expense of the operators. Liberal indemnities are paid to the injured, and very substantial allowances to the dependents of any who may lose their lives. Due to the efficiency of the State mining department, accidents, fatal and nonfatal, have been reduced to a minimum. The commissaries furnish the very best that can be bought, and goods are sold on a slight margin of profit, and in some cases at prices covering actual cost.

Our miners are delighted with their environment and their work. They would not quit their occupation for any other vocation. If left alone and free of the agitator from less-favored fields, they get along with their employers in harmony and in friendship.

West Virginians are proud of their miners, proud of their operators, proud of their coal, and proud of their State.

First Anniversary of the Signing of the Armistice Between Austria and Italy, November 4, 1918—Italy's Splendid Efforts in the War and Her Supreme Triumph.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. AUGUSTINE LONERGAN,

OF CONNECTICUT,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, November 4, 1919.

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. Speaker, November 4 being the anniversary of the signing of the armistice between Italy and Austria, I wish to extend in the RECORD my remarks before the Alpine Guards, of Hartford, Conn., on Italy's efforts and her supreme victory in the war:

"Mr. Chairman, members of the Alpine Guards, of Hartford, and friends, one year ago to-day the armistice between Italy and Austria was signed. To-day the Italian flag floats over a larger territory than it ever has since the days of the great Roman Empire.

"We have come together to celebrate an event that has been in the dreams of Italy for generations, and which was consummated only by the national determination of the Italian people at whatever cost to redeem her lost Provinces and to bring under her banner a united nation.

"Allied with the Imperial German Government and with her enemy, Austria, in what diplomats called the triple alliance, Italy informed her associates in August, 1914, when Germany threw down the gauntlet to the world, that her alliance was one of defense, not an association for aggression, and she refused to be a party to the conspiracy to make might rule the world.

"Viscount Grey, then secretary of state for foreign affairs for the British Empire, had stated long before the war broke out that the great value of the triple alliance to Europe was that it kept Austria and Italy from warring against each other. Consequently when Italy broke with her associates in 1914 she did what any honorable nation would do and what every right-thinking nation expected she would do.

"When the German troops were loosed upon Belgium, and when France and England had to muster all their strength, the Italian Government informed the French ambassador at Rome that France need have no fear of her Italian border. So far as Italy was concerned she could remove every French soldier from her Italian frontier garrisons and be assured her interests in the Mediterranean were secure. These facts, my friends, are written large in history. The German Government, unable to comprehend why a nation should cling to its honor rather than to patent material interests, was incapable of conceiving Italy's high standard and sent to Rome one of her greatest diplomats to prevent, if possible, the righteous wrath of the Italian people from falling upon Austria.

"To the eternal credit of Italy, be it said that he failed.

"In May, 1915, war was declared, and the first troops to move forward to the frontiers were the Alpini. 'These are our boundaries,' said the officers, 'but we advance to make new ones.' From that day till the close of the conflict the bravery and self-sacrifice of the Alpini have been a model to the world. Undaunted by the rugged character of the terrain over which they fought, undismayed by cold, glorying in hardship, suffering in silence, dying if need be, they carried the standards of Italy ever forward.

"To-day we look on Italy's story from the summit of victory.

"But it is well to go back to the terrible year of 1917, when Italy was hard pressed by her foe, but when she clung to the desire for victory with all the strength that was in her, come what may. I remember at that time I conferred with officials of the Royal Italian Embassy in Washington, and my heart went out to the nation at its great sacrifices. To think, for instance, that cards in Italy had to be issued for every kind of food; that meat could be purchased but three times a week. Olive oil, a staple product of the land and used exclusively for cooking, was rationed at the rate of a pint per person a month, and the population was in some places fed only on bread. These statements give a scant idea only of what the country endured. Her industries were seriously handicapped by the shortage of coal, her reserve coal supply had long since been exhausted, and even her beautiful forests had been destroyed so that railroads and war industries could be kept going.

"As the Prince of the Udine and Senator Marconi, in the United States on a war mission, then said, the need of Italy was for all material supplies, but principally for ships and coal, and more ships and more coal.

"But despite this hardship and despite the costly retreat of her troops at Caporetto early in November, 1917, Italy fought on with determination, and in November of 1917 stopped the Austrian advance.

"The United States, mindful of her great efforts, responded to her call as it has always responded to the call of free men seeking liberty from oppression. Food and fuel and ships were dispatched to Italy, and the moral support of the United States augured for the success of Italian arms under the white cross of Savoy.

"I use no figure of speech when I say Italy entered the year 1918 with her back to the wall. She had given lavishly of men and wealth from the very start. The peace strength of her armies in 1914 was 14,000 officers and 271,000 men, to which she summoned her mobile militia and classes enough to bring the total combatants in the first line to 1,000,000, with a reserve of 2,000,000 men in the territorials. It may be well here to state that during the entire war Italy mobilized 26 classes, and, according to official figures, had in the service 5,615,000 men. Of her armies 421,000 men were killed in the zone of operations, 3,100 were lost at sea, more than 50,000 died as prisoners, 22,000 met death in the zone of territorials, her wounded numbered 949,000, and 485,000 had been taken prisoners of war. She called upon the Alpini time and again, and those great troops furnished 80 companies to the colors. Italy's losses had been sustained largely before the campaign of 1918.

"Truly the prospect was dark.

"But Italy was soon to show she could bring victory out of suffering. In June, 1918, the Austrians, flushed with pride and aided by the best troops of Germany and Magyar battalions, succeeded in crossing the Piave River, to which stream she had advanced her line. It was the last supreme effort of the Austro-Hungarian monarchy to overthrow Italy. For the decisive test the central Government had concentrated on the Italian front practically her whole fighting force, 73 divisions, or 960 battalions, and 7,500 guns, and 54 of these divisions were crowded on the front of attack supported by 6,000 guns in battle position. Never in the history of Italy had her armies faced so formidable a foe.

"Then, too, Gen. Diaz and the supreme command decided for all time to end the threat of Austria. To oppose the forces of the foe he had but 51 Italian divisions. But their hearts were steeled with the thoughts of the eyes of all Italy upon them, and they possessed a courage known only to men fighting for their homes. On June 20 the savage attacks of the Austrians were pinned down, and two days later, defeated, broken, dismayed, the troops of Austria began their final retreat, leaving nearly 200,000 dead upon the field, while the Italian losses were but 90,000. From the Astico River to the Adriatic Sea the whole strength of the Italian Army was thrown against the enemy, and the Austrians were pushed back, back, ever back, never again to advance. During July and August Italy improved the lines she won, and in October, by a supreme effort, she fell again upon the Austrian lines, capturing 100,000 prisoners and 2,200 guns, so that a year ago to-day Austria was glad to save herself by signing the armistice that brought Italy again to her own.

"Not only in Italy, but in France, in Serbia, and wherever the fighting was keenest did the royal Italian forces distinguish themselves.

"On sea, as well as land, the colors of Italy waved high. Her battle squadrons were ever on the alert, her cruisers and torpedo boats combed the Mediterranean and the Adriatic for submarines while they held in continual blockade the great fleet of Austria. All through the naval engagements did her fleet work night and day, and the torpedoing of the Viribus Unitis, the greatest of the Austrian superdreadnoughts, by two Italian officers, Rossetti and Paolucci, who made their way to Pola in a small motor boat, was but an indication of the initiative and bravery of her sailors.

"The same characteristics that Italy displayed during the war were indications of the virtues we in America had come to look for in Italians. From the very time when Italian immigration began to bring to these shores citizens of Italy, they became at once assets to the American Nation. Inspired by a history that had given them a Columbus to revere, a Mazzini and a Cavour to honor, they became in business, in professional, in industrial life in America among the leaders of our land.

"The statistical division of the War Department has informed me that nearly 100,000 Italians were in the American forces during the war. This does not take into account the great number of Italians who returned to their country upon the entry of Italy into the war and before the entry of the United States.

"Connecticut early attracted them, and to-day one finds that the largest percentage of Italians and Americans of Italian parentage are located in Connecticut, New York State, and New Jersey. Progressive, industrious, law-abiding, they are enriching the Commonwealth by their settlement in it.

"The world to-day is passing through a period of unrest. What will be the ultimate outcome of it no one can say. But this one can surmise, that the nation or nations which most retain their better judgment and ordinary everyday common sense during these trying times will in the end be the gainers. The world is big, but it can hold only one Russia.

"Italy to-day is faced with the same reconstruction problems that engage the attention of all the nations. I had asked the late Italian ambassador at Washington, Count Macchi di Cellere, what he considered the best ways that the United States could aid Italy in this period of reconstruction, and, gentlemen, a communication that I will always cherish, whether in my public career or private life, was a letter to me he dictated on his deathbed, stating he had instructed the Italian high commissioner in the United States, Mr. Quattrone, to send information along the lines desired. Count di Cellere's letter reached me at the same time that I heard of his death from a sudden illness.

"There is no question but that Italy is entering upon one of the greatest commercial eras of her life. The trials of the war are over. Her commerce must seek greater foreign purchasers. The United States she has always found her best customer. Between Italy and the United States there always have been, and always will be, bonds of friendship that the years will cement more firmly rather than dissolve.

"Nothing could have evidenced this more than the splendid reception given to the Italian war mission when it came to the United States and to President Wilson when he visited Italy in January of 1919.

"Speaking at the Quirinal in Rome, he said:

"The Italians in the United States have excited a particular degree of admiration. They, I believe, are the only people of a given nationality who have been careful to organize themselves to see that their compatriots coming to America were from month to month and year to year guided to the places of the industries most suitable to their previous habits. No other nationality has taken such pains as that, and in serving their fellow countrymen they have served the United States, because these people have found places where they would be most useful and would most immediately earn their own living, and they have thereby added to the prosperity of the country itself. In every way we have been happy at home and abroad with the people of this great State.

"That same day, speaking before the Italian Parliament, Mr. Wilson stated:

"There is only one thing that holds nations together, if you exclude force, and that is friendship and good will. The only thing that binds men together is friendship, and by the same token the only thing that binds nations together is friendship.

"In Genoa Mr. Wilson placed at the monument of Mazzini a floral tribute, and that same day he visited and crowned with flowers the monument of Columbus. At Milan his heart went out to the League of Mothers and Widows of Italy's heroes who died in the war, and at Milan, too, as he himself said, he was deeply touched—to receive at the hands of wounded soldiers a memorial in favor of a league of nations, and to be told by them that that was what they had fought for; not merely to win this war but to secure something beyond, some guarantee of justice, some equilibrium for the world as a whole which would make it certain that they would never have to fight a war like this again.

"All through his Italian trip, from his entrance to that country until his last address before the University of Turin, the President pointed out the reciprocal advantages that would accrue to Italy and the United States from a mutual friendship, sealed by the blood of soldier brothers in arms, who died for justice and truth.

"To-night, my friends, the Italian flag waves over Trent and Triest, and Italy that was unredeemed has been redeemed, and the glory of a new age is before her. The Adriatic question is rapidly nearing solution, and every effort is being made to meet the wishes of the Italian Government in an equitable and just settlement.

"Italy has given to exploration a Columbus, to sculpture a Michelangelo, to painting a Titian, to science a Marconi, to military art a Garibaldi and a Diaz, to theology a St. Thomas Aquinas, but, above all, and of more importance in these days of uncertainty and stress, she has given to the world a code of laws that will stand for all time as a sheet anchor for civilization, if it is ever going to arrive at the high purpose of creation.

"No nation has had a greater past.
No nation has a brighter future."

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ADOLPH J. SABATH,

OF ILLINOIS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, October 31, 1919.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, Senate concurrent resolution 15 reads as follows:

Whereas the enforcement of the law and maintenance of order for the security of life and property and the protection of the individual citizen in the exercise of his constitutional rights is the first and paramount duty of the Government and must be at all times vigorously and effectively safeguarded by the use of every means essential to that end: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That we hereby give the national administration and all others in authority the assurance of our constant, continuous, and unqualified support in the use of such constitutional and lawful means as may be necessary to meet the present industrial emergency and in vindicating the majesty and power of the Government in enforcing obedience to and respect for the Constitution and the laws, and in fully protecting every citizen in the maintenance and exercise of his lawful rights and the observance of his lawful obligations.

No Member of this House sworn to uphold the Constitution of the United States can do otherwise than record his vote in favor of this resolution. As one who believes in our form of government, in our institutions, and having the utmost confidence in the administration and especially in President Wilson, I feel satisfied that he nor anyone else, with his consent, would in any way deprive any citizen of protection in the maintenance and exercise of his lawful rights as stated in the resolution nor of his rights guaranteed him by the Constitution.

I am satisfied that the President will not abuse his great power so as to aid the coal operators or do anything that would in any way injure the cause of organized labor. He is a firm believer in arbitration, and I, as one who for years have advocated arbitration at the request of organized labor, hope that he will, if requested, again succeed as he has succeeded before. I am satisfied that the cause of organized labor and all labor in general can not be injured by arbitration, and therefore I trust that the labor leaders and the members will give arbitration most serious and careful consideration.

At present all the large plants and industries are supplied with coal. Only the smaller plants and poorer class of people are without a sufficient supply. Therefore it will be the middle class and the laboring people that will suffer most.

I am of the opinion that the cause of labor will be advanced and benefited if arbitration will be agreed to. I venture the prediction that any fair investigation on the part of a board of arbitrators is bound to be beneficial to labor, as such board could not ignore the evidence that would be forthcoming in proving conclusively the conniving manipulations between the producers, jobbers, speculators, and wholesalers of coal. Oh, I know how the laboring people feel; I know that they have full knowledge of the thorough understanding of the larger employers in many of our industries relative to organized labor. It is for that reason organized labor must be careful so as not to be placed in a false light and false position before the country. It must be known to the leaders that these large industries control a majority of the big newspapers of the country, and by clever editorials and advertisements can easily prejudice the minds of the people, and it would be most unfortunate for the cause of labor that it should lose the confidence and sympathy of the people. To-day the sentiment of a majority of the American people is already in doubt because the public has been made to believe that organized labor has not lived up to its contract. And if the strike should continue for any length of time and the cold spell sets in, causing untold hardship and suffering, surely the operators will have gained their point in winning the most important factor, namely, the sentiment of the public. This I can not too strongly impress upon the minds of all leaders and organizers of labor. The farmers, who would suffer the last and least because of their supply of fuel, have already gone on record against the strike, and surely the people in the large cities and manufacturing districts, who would suffer the most, will not look with favor on a strike at a time when they will be most affected by it. For that reason I, as one who has at all times stood by and advocated and shall continue to assist and aid the cause of organized labor and the cause of labor in general, hope, notwithstanding this late hour, that heed will be taken of the danger that confronts organized labor, and that it will not risk a premature battle which if lost will not only mean not securing its present demands but may endanger the future of an organization that has taken so many years to build up and demanded so many sacrifices on the part of many honest and sincere men.

I have the utmost confidence that if time, opportunity, and authorization be given to President Wilson, of whom it must be said that he has been and is a real friend of organized labor, that he will, within a reasonable time, bring about an adjustment of all claims which will be fair, equitable, and will secure a fair deal to all.

SPEECH

OF

HON. RUFUS HARDY,

OF TEXAS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, August 1, 1919.

The House had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7500) to protect the coastwise trade of the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, at the end of 35 minutes I ask to be notified.

Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, this bill, in my judgment, illustrates to a large extent the character of reform and reconstruction measures that will be presented in all probability by the party now having the majority of this House. It illustrates the poverty of their ideas of reconstruction by showing that their idea is limited to the one thought of returning to their old policy and process of protection in every possible form. In other words, undoing as much as possible of the legislation of the Democratic Party along the lines of tariff reform and along the lines of building up the merchant marine by striking down the monopolistic privileges and advantages of American shipbuilders as fast as they can accomplish it.

It has been said, and it is true, that special interests never sleep. And so while we had on the statute books a law which accorded to the owners of vessels built elsewhere, but owned and registered in America, the right to engage in our coastwise trade during a period of the war and for 120 days thereafter, the special shipbuilding interests and allied railroad and coastwise shipping interests were not able to wait for the expiration of that time, but must hasten the repeal of that law instanter, in order to be given back the privilege of having sole right to build the only ships which would be permitted to engage in coastwise trade. The repeal contained in the proposed bill reinstates the old law and thereby restricts our coastwise trade to ships built in the United States. Now, the law that this bill proposes to repeal was approved October 6, 1917. It provides that during the present war with Germany, and for a period of 120 days thereafter, the United States Shipping Board may, if in its judgment the interests of the United States require, suspend the present provisions of the law and permit vessels of foreign register and foreign-built vessels admitted to American registry under the act of August 8, 1914, to engage in the coastwise trade of the United States.

Why was that bill passed and what is the history of legislation on this subject? I want to deal a little in generalities. The gentleman who just addressed you says that we want to get back to our long-established policy; that is, the policy of excluding every ship from American coastwise trade that was not built in the United States, however owned. That has been our long policy. It is a policy differing from that of any other great nation on the earth, and directly the reverse of the policy of the greatest maritime Nation on earth. England for over 60 years, the greatest shipbuilding and greatest navigating and mercantile country of the world, has permitted her merchants to buy their ships in any open market of the world where they could be bought cheapest.

Mr. SCOTT rose.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Let me say that I have only 35 minutes. I do not propose to interrupt anybody on that side, and I can not yield any time for an interruption. Bear in mind that it has been our policy to exclude from our flag any ship built anywhere on earth except in the United States, and to exclude from our coastwise trade any ship not under our flag. An American citizen might buy a ship built anywhere, but if he bought one built outside of the United States he could neither put the American flag above it nor use it in any of our coastwise or inland transportation. Many men have many times tried to change that policy, but always prior to August 8, 1914, every effort to do so has been defeated.

Under that policy we have had a history which the gentleman calls "the glorious prewar history," and he tells us that there is no opposition to a return to that policy. Mr. Speaker, for 50 years immediately preceding the war of 1914 our overseas merchant marine had an inglorious and an ignominious history. We did have a great coastwise merchant marine, but we had a disgraceful prewar condition under which our flag vanished from the high seas, and we had no overseas merchant marine. It is an easy thing to build up a great home industry of any kind for the manufacture of an essential necessity of a great people, if you exclude absolutely any competition from any other quarter of the globe. Suppose we had a law that provided that no woolen goods should ever be sold in the United States except those made in the United States—not a tariff upon it, but an absolute exclusion. Do you not know that you would build up a great woolen industry? Our woolens would come monstrously high, but our wool manufacturers would greatly prosper. We have had a great amount of coastwise shipping absolutely necessary to be done, and by excluding any shipping built elsewhere than in America we have built in America ships to meet the necessities of the coastwise trade, but we have built them at a cost which rendered any competition in them with the free and open shipping of other nations absolutely impossible. I want to go back and tell you a little of the history of this legislation. Let me give you a little of the story and of the history of our merchant marine. Prior to 1860 we had a great merchant marine engaged in the overseas trade, and why? Because prior to that time our ships were the best ships built for the money in the world and our seamen were the best seamen in the world. I am not sure, but think it likely that other nations had restrictions just like ours that protected their shipbuilders from competition. Building ships under the same restrictions with other nations, we built and furnished to the commerce of the world the cheapest ships and the cheapest unit of transportation and got the trade.

When the war between the States came on, Confederate cruisers sank some of the merchant vessels of the United States, and over 800,000 tons of merchant shipping of the North was sold abroad, mainly to England. England had too much sense to persist in her restrictions or to refuse to buy ships built in this country and put them under her flag. I think it was about 1852 that England repealed her law forbidding her merchants buying ships abroad and sailing them under her flag. She was for her merchant marine. In 1861 to 1865 she bought our ships and put them under her flag in all her trades, and at the close of that war, owing to sales and destructions, America, from carrying 70 per cent of the commerce between her and foreign nations, dropped down to carrying less than 33 per cent, while England forged far to the front in shipping. What happened then? Did we strike the shackles from our shipping, as England had done? No. Wishing to coddle and protect another industry—that of iron and steel—we put upon our statute books a law which imposed a duty of 50 per cent on shipbuilding material. We had an old law excluding foreign-built ships from our coastwise trade, and this was continued in force, of course. Then our shipbuilding went up. In the meantime England had learned to build steel and iron ships and was putting them into the trade, and our shipbuilders, being behind in that respect and having a monopoly of the coastwise trade, said to themselves this: "If we retain the monopoly of the coastwise trade that will satisfy us; we can build for that trade, because no English-built ship can partake of it, but if we throw down the bars and let our merchants buy ships elsewhere and put the American flag on them and use them in our coastwise trade, England will come in and sell ships to our merchants, and we must go out of business entirely unless we build ships in competition with England." The shipbuilders were protected by an exclusive privilege to build the only ships permitted in the coastwise trade. The coastwise trade was seven-eighths of our entire merchant shipping, and so our shipbuilders said, "Give us an exclusive privilege of building seven-eighths of the shipping used by American merchants and we do not care what becomes of the other eighth." What happened? The 33 per cent of our foreign commerce that we were carrying, or thereabouts, at the close of the war began to diminish.

Some of the ships that were capable of going overseas, old wooden vessels, sailing vessels, and one or two ships that we had subsidized to carry the mail, continued to float, but every time an American merchantman went down on the high seas and the owner was called on to say whether he would buy an American ship and replace that which went down he was confronted with this condition, that if he did buy an American ship to replace the sunken one he had to pay from 50 to 100 per cent more for it than his British competitor would pay for a ship of the same tonnage. Let me give you an illustration. A ship that would cost, according to the statement of James J. Hill, $1,000,000 in this country would cost about $600,000 in England. This statement was amply sustained by the testimony before our committee. What did that mean? It meant that if an American shipowner bought an American-built ship he would pay $1,000,000 for it, $400,000 more than his British competitor, and finance it by 6 per cent bonds. It meant that in insurance he would pay insurance upon $1,000,000, $400,000 more than his British competitor; and for repairs he would pay in proportion, and estimating, as ship men do, that in 20 years the repairs equal the cost of the ship, he would therefore pay $400,000 more for repairs in 20 years than his British competitor. Depreciation is estimated by ship men also at 5 per cent per annum, and he must allow for depreciation on the extra $400,000. These items of extra costs and expenses add up this way: Interest on the extra $400,000 at 6 per cent, $24,000; marine insurance on the extra $400,000, $20,000; repairs on the extra $400,000 at 5 per cent, $20,000; depreciation on the extra $400,000, $20,000. So that if he purchased that million dollar American ship and put it on the ocean in competition with the $600,000 English ship of the same carrying capacity, in interest, insurance, repairs, and depreciation, he would have to bear a handicap of $80,000 a year before he got to the question of competing in operation. Consequently your American merchant said, "No; I will buy a British ship and put it under the British flag," and he did. The result was that in 1870, instead of 33 per cent, we had 28 per cent of our commerce carried under our flag; in 1880 we had less than 20 per cent; and in 1914 when this war broke out, when all or nearly all of the old ships had vanished, had sunk beneath the waves, or had been lost in some other way, we were carrying under our flag only 8 per cent of the commerce between us and other nations.

Mr. Speaker, that is the "glorious condition" that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SCOTT] wants us to return to, the prewar condition. That is the move that is being made now. I wonder if the mercantile interests of the United States are asleep. I wonder if they slumber while the shipbuilding interests are now seeking to obtain the same "old glorious conditions" that drove our flag from the seas? They contend that we can not build the ships as cheaply as they can build them in England. I want to tell you that as a member of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries I heard witness after witness before that committee when they were opposing the seaman's bill and claiming that it would prevent our competing with foreign ships say that our Great Lakes tonnage did not cost anything more than the English ships of similar kind, and they said that our shipbuilders could compete with England if given sufficient volume of shipping and permitted to build standardized ships.

This war has given the volume of business; this war has enabled them to standardize shipbuilding, and Edward Hurley says that the American shipbuilder to-day can compete with the shipbuilders of the world. On that I want to call your attention to just a little comment of Mr. Hurley in a letter to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, as follows

It seems logical that the United States Government will be very influential in establishing the world market price for vessels.

How? Well, let me tell you how. It may do it if we put our shipbuilders on their mettle and say, "You have got the finest shipyards; you have got the cheapest material, both wood and iron; you have got the most convenient coal; your labor may or may not cost you a little more, but you are building in large quantities. You can standardize your ships—build many ships of the same pattern—and as you build machinery and make shoes for the world, so you can build ships for the world. You can do that only in one way. You must beat the world in price." Can we do it? The shipbuilders will tell you no, when they are asking for special legislative favors, because, as all other human beings, they love a special privilege. The iron manufacturers and steel manufacturers furnish the material for our domestic-built ships. They said they could not compete. That was when they wanted a duty of 50 per cent on shipbuilding material. But when we passed the law putting material for shipbuilding purposes on the free list they did compete, and thereafter not an ounce or a pound of steel was bought from abroad unless it was some special order. Our shipbuilder did not need to go abroad to get cheap building material. He got it right here from our iron and steel manufacturers, who competed when they had to. Oh, we had the higher wages in 1860 than they had abroad, and we had higher wages for 40 years prior to 1860, yet the genius of America enabled our shipbuilders to build ships that competed with the world. The man in charge of the shipbuilding of the United States to-day says that we ought to set the pace to the world and build ships for the world. Mr. Speaker, if our shipyards are permitted, and I am not sure that they are—I think they are not—to make contracts and build ships for the world, they will have contracts to keep them busy at enormous prices for five years, while the tonnage of the world is being replenished and the destruction of the war is being made good. Why not do as I urge, and let the American shipbuilders begin now taking contracts to build ships for foreign merchants, and let the ships we have be allowed fo seek their market in the open markets of the world, and let our Government sell the ships we are bound to sell to the highest bidder, no matter where he comes from. Then our merchants will have an equal showing. I would be willing, other things being equal, to give a preference to American citizens in the sale of the Government's ships, but if we expect to establish a real merchant marine we will not do it by coddling or giving special favors either to the ship buyer or shipbuilder. Let our ship buyer go into the markets of the world, ours included, and buy his ship where he can buy it cheapest, just as the British ship buyer does. Then he will pay for his ship the same that the Britisher does, and he will go to sea and compete successfully. Mr. Speaker, there are so many elements that enter into successful competition that only good management can bring success. There are fixed or overhead charges every ship company has to pay, whether it does little or much business. So, therefore, the cheapness of transportation depends largely upon the volume of business. America has the greatest volume of business of any nation on earth, and with that volume of business of her own she can furnish the transportation for her own ships.

Let me illustrate by two ships, each of 10,000 tons capacity. Now, each carries the same crew. Each pays interest on the same bonded debt, has the same repairs, pays the same price for fuel and supplies, has the same depreciation, and pays the same marine insurance. If the ships cost the same, there is no possible question that all these items except wages are precisely the same. It is sometimes claimed that American ships must and do pay higher wages than English ships, but the fact is not disputed that since the seamen's bill went into operation wages on British and American ships are substantially equal. Now, to proceed with the illustration: Suppose one of these ships is British and the other American. Suppose the American ship sails fully laden out of New York for Liverpool, makes good time on her voyage, remains only a few days in the port of Liverpool, and returns fully laden with freight-paying cargo to New York. That would be first-class operating management. Suppose the British ship leaves New York only half laden, goes to Liverpool in slow time, hangs up in Liverpool 15 days securing cargo and loading, and then returns. Which one of these ships will make the more profitable voyage, regardless of a possible slight or even a great difference in wages? Or suppose the British ship goes out of New York full laden, makes quick voyage, makes quick turn around, and returns to New York fully laden, while the American ship goes out from New York well laden, makes a slow voyage to Liverpool, stays there 15 days, and returns to New York in ballast. How about the profits then?

Bear in mind that while a ship is crossing the ocean not exceeding 10 per cent of the cost of operation is wages; and it is estimated by the Shipping Board that a 10,000-ton steel ship, hung up in port, costs on an average $3,000 per day. I presume it would cost her $5,000 per day traversing the sea on her return trip in ballast, so that the ship that stayed in port 15 days and traveled 15 days on her return trip in ballast would have $120,000 in losses or expenses which she would have to make up by higher freights on her outward cargo. The ballast trip alone would consume half her operating cost.

Our merchant marine can never be made a success by subsidy.

The Republicans have claimed for the last 20 years that the high wages paid our seamen prevented us from competing with Great Britain. Let me give you the testimony of Hon. J. H. Rosseter, Director of Operations of the Shipping Board, Emergency Fleet Corporation, before our committee the other day:

Mr. ROSSETER. The first time I ventured to send a ship out in the East India trade, which, by the way, was very much resented by our British friends, I sent out a 7,000-ton cargo ship. In making the round voyage on the theory of an outward and homeward cargo she would have carried 14,000 tons—7,000 outward and 7,000 homeward. Instead of that, her freight list showed she handled 27,000 tons on the voyage, which was explained by the fact that 13,000 tons was way-to-way business. She went to Manila and discharged a certain amount of cargo there and replaced it with cargo for Singapore; she went to Singapore and landed cargo and replaced it with cargo for Calcutta; she took a cargo at Calcutta for Colombo, for Colombo to Singapore, to Siam, and to Manila. In fact, in that constant interchange she carried on the one voyage 27,000 tons.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Rosseter, is it not a fact if the cargo space can be continually filled by profitable freight that that is a greater question than the cost of wages or anything else connected with the successful operation of the ships?

Mr. ROSSETER. Absolutely; it is the dominating factor.

Mr. HARDY. And also the length of time required to fill in this cargo; that is, to load and unload?

Mr. ROSSETER. Very important—dispatch.

Mr. HARDY. Now, is it or not a fact that the difference between the English and American wages would sink into insignificance in comparison with the good or bad management of the operation of the ships belonging to English and American companies?

Mr. ROSSETER. That is quite true. I put the difference in wages very far down in the scale of importance.

Good management avoids delays and ballast-laden trips. Competition depends upon good management, in utilizing every advantage, and no nation has more advantages than America, if her merchantmen will take them. But you can not make two ships of equal capacity but greatly different cost compete on the ocean, under the same flag or under different flags, for this reason. The ocean is free. Our treaties properly stipulate for equal treatment of our ships and foreign ships in our ports and in theirs. The flag makes no difference in the cost of operating the ships. Since an American citizen may invest in shipping under the British flag or under our flag, naturally if he can buy the British ship cheaper than he can the American he will buy the British ship and operate it under the British flag. This is what has happened in the past and all because under our law no ship could fly the American flag unless she was built in America.

That old law which prohibited an American merchant from buying his ship anywhere outside of America, if he would put the American flag on it, and then excluded ships under foreign flags from engaging in our coastwise trade, saved to American shipowners all our coastwise trade, but gave to the American shipbuilder a monopoly in the coastwise shipbuilding which caused American ships to cost nearly double what British ships cost. We are asked now in this bill to go back to that old law. If we do, what will happen?

The American ships, notwithstanding the great number we have, will go to a higher price than foreign ships. That will happen, and every man knows it who has fairly studied the question. If you are a merchant and wanted to engage in the overseas trade between New York and Liverpool and you saw in the harbor of New York two ships which looked just alike and you wanted to buy one of them and put it in the trade between Liverpool and New York you would make inquiry as to the capacity and worth of the ships. When you have investigated you can not tell which is the best ship. But you find a tag on one, "This ship may engage in the coastwise trade of the United States," and a tag on the other, "This ship can not so engage." What do you say then? You would say, "If I go to Liverpool with a cargo from New York to Liverpool I will bring imports from Liverpool to New York," which is the greatest import city in our country. But when I get my cargo discharged at New York I may find New York is overdone with cargo space going back to Liverpool. There is no cargo from New York. What am I going to do? I have got to go from New York to Savannah or Galveston to get a cargo in return. And if I have the foreign ship I have got to go in ballast to Savannah or Galveston. I can not carry a pound of freight from New York to either of those ports. I can not carry a passenger. I must take that long voyage of 1,800 miles around the coast of Florida, breasting the storm and dangers of the seas, with ballast which I must unload when I get there. It will cost me $50,000 to take that empty voyage; but if I have an American ship I can go laden with freight from New York to Savannah or Galveston and earn $100,000." Now which ship will you buy? You will buy the ship that permits you to go laden from New York to Galveston.

What does that mean? It means that you will give, regardless of what the ship cost to build, 50 per cent more for the ship you can use in this coastal trade than for a ship you can not so use, and so the American-built ship, because it has this exclusive privilege of our coastwise trade, goes up in price. Every man in the sound of my voice, if he has got the meaning of my words, knows that that exclusive privilege and consequent high price of American ships has driven our ships and our flag from the overseas trade. They say we have got a recent law on the statute books that admits foreign-built ships to our flag for overseas trade. That is true; but the same law treats them as foreign ships by excluding them from our coastwise trade; and when that law was passed I said to the committee that reported it out, "You will not have a foreign-built ship coming under the American flag under that law."

Experience demonstrated the truth of what I said. Until the World War no ships built abroad came to our flag under the permission given in that law. Our own citizens owned thousands of tons of ships under the British flag, but they did not try or care to put them under our flag, because they had nothing to gain by doing it and much to lose. He would read the law and say, "That does not give me a privilege that I have not already got under the English flag. I can sail from New York to Liverpool under the English flag, and I can sail from Liverpool to New York under the English flag. It does not give me a single privilege I have not got without changing my flag. Does it take anything away from me?" Yes; the English ships have certain privileges belonging to the English flag, among them the privilege to engage in the coastwise trade of a dozen different nations with whom England has a treaty of comity under which they may engage in her coastwise trade and she may engage in their coastwise trade. So that an American citizen with a ship under a foreign flag has absolutely no inducement to put it under our flag if you limit his rights under that flag to doing what he could do under any other flag.

So it turned out in experience, in practice, that not a foreign-built ship came under our flag until after the dangers of war made them seek our flag for safety from enemy destruction. Then they began to come. In the meantime, seeing that the law I have referred to was a dead letter—was useless—some of us tried to amend it.

In 1914 we passed the bill in the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, and I want to have the privilege of reading to you in reference to it. Of course, I can hardly touch this subject in the time at my disposal. But in 1914 the House passed a bill amending the Panama act by extending the privilege of registering American-owned but foreign-built ships. That bill went over to the Senate. The necessities of the western coast were such that a western Senator offered an amendment that the foreign-built ships which were admitted to American register might be permitted the privilege of engaging in coastwise trade from the Pacific to the Atlantic coast in order to relieve the necessities of a lumber trade and other urgent needs. It went into the Senate, and it was amended there by letting them go from the Pacific to the Gulf coast and from the Gulf coast to the Atlantic coast. It came back and went to a conference committee. The conference committee agreed, and here is what they agreed to:

SEC. 4132. Vessels built within the United States and belonging wholly to citizens thereof; and vessels which may be captured in war by citizens of the United States and lawfully condemned as prize, or which may be adjudged to be forfeited for a breach of the laws of the United States; and seagoing vessels, whether steam or sail, which have been certified by the Steamboat-Inspection Service as safe to carry dry and perishable cargo, wherever built, which are to engage only in trade with foreign countries or with the Philippine Islands and the islands of Guam and Tutuila, being wholly owned by citizens of the United States or corporations organized and chartered under the laws of the United States or of any State thereof, the president and managing directors of which shall be citizens of the United States, and no others, may be registered as directed in this title. Foreign-built vessels may engage in the coastwise trade if registered pursuant to the provisions of this act within two years from its passage.

That report was signed by every member of the conferees. It was signed by James A. O'Gorman, J. R. Thornton, JOHN K. SHIELDS, and WILLIAM E. BORAH on the part of the Senate, and by J. W. ALEXANDER, RUFUS HARDY, and O. W. UNDERWOOD on the part of the House. It proposed to let all ships registered within two years from the date of it, if they belonged to an American citizen, enter into the coastwise trade. Opposition to it developed at once.

The fight began, and we find this:

Mr. O'Gorman said:

In the first place, it was demonstrated by the report of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries in the other House, not more than a year ago, that 92 per cent of all the vessels in the American coastwise trade are either owned or under the control of the railroads of the country or of shipping combinations which are operated in disregard of the Sherman antitrust law.

Then Mr. Gallinger interrupted. Mr. Gallinger said:

Oh, Mr. President, they will be here. The foreigners want to get into our coastwise trade, and as their ships cost much less than ours, they can compete with us on unequal terms. Foreigners have spent a great deal of money to break down the coastwise laws of the United States, both by direct expenditure and by advertising in the great newspapers of the country.

Mr. Lippitt said:

Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire, if I may be allowed to do so, if it would not be something of an injustice to allow foreign-built ships to come into the coastwise trade when they have been built abroad at from a third to a half of the sum that our American shipowners have been obliged to pay for their vessels?

The argument made was that if foreign ships were allowed to come into the coastwise trade it would drive the domestic ships from that trade. And the admission was freely made that the foreign-built ships did drive our domestic-built ships from the seas in the foreign or overseas trade. In the end the conference report was rejected and the bill failed. The same interests that defeated that bill are back of the bill here to-day.

Gentlemen, you are up to this. The proposition is: Are you willing for the commerce of the United States to be sacrificed on the altar of the shipbuilders' self-interest? or shall we say to our shipbuilders, "You have every advantage, in cheaper iron, steel, coal, and timber, and you have got to compete with England in building ships. We are sending our manufactured goods to the four quarters of the world. We are building locomotives and sending rails all over the world. Our machinery goes everywhere. We have the cheapest coal with which to build ships here, and the cheapest iron material with which to build ships here, and you must compete." We know they will not compete unless they have to, but they will compete when they have to do so.

Mr. Hurley says that our shipbuilding plants ought to be a controlling factor in fixing the world price for ships. How are we going to do it if we start in by excluding every ship not built in America from our coastwise trade and thereby boosting the price of the American ship 25 or 50 per cent beyond the price of any other? Will not the sequence be that we will return to the glorious condition that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SCOTT] referred to when our ships were unknown in foreign ports, and will not the time soon come again when the Stars and Stripes will never brighten the skies of a foreign clime, and an American-built ship and the American flag on the high seas be as rare as an Arctic bird in the zones of the Tropics?

In the time at my disposal I can scarcely touch this subject. I am going to reserve the balance of my time after a moment. I want to ask you who it is that wants so hastily to repeal the law under which foreign-built but American owned and operated ships may engage in our coast trade, and not even give them the right to continue in our coast trade for the 120 days remaining after the war?

Surely they are the same people who have had a shipbuilding monopoly for 60 years in America and who drove our flag off the seas.

I want to tell you of a condition that I know existed in Galveston. I know that our coastwise shipping combined by conferences with the railroads and that the rates on goods shipped from New York to Galveston was from 100 per cent to 200 per cent higher than the rates on the same goods from Liverpool to Galveston. I had a list furnished me by the secretary of the chamber of commerce there, containing 100 articles, with the rates from New York to Galveston and the corresponding rates from Bremen and Liverpool to Galveston.

Under the old conditions sought to be restored by this bill we only built the ships which nobody else was allowed to build. We carried the commerce of our coastwise trade in our own ships, built in our own country, because no other ships were allowed to come in, and Mr. SCOTT calls it an "achievement." It is the shameful achievement of cowards who dare not face the opportunity to fight and dare not live in competition with the world. We are pandering to that sentiment now, knowing, as we must know, that it will put a premium on American-built shipping and thereby confine our flag to our coastwise trade and make it impossible for us to compete for the trade of the world. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time and ask that the gentlemen on the other side take some of their time.

* * * * * * *

After further debate, in answer to proponents of the measure, Mr. HARDY offered his amendment, which is shown in extension of remarks.

Mr. SCOTT. I want to reserve a point of order on the amendment now, so that we will not lose any right.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, pass the bill as submitted by the committee and you bid farewell to the American merchant marine after a few years on the high seas, unless you welcome the old guest that we had knocking at the doors of Congress for so many years, ship subsidy. The plea for a subsidy follows in the wake of this bill, and, in my judgment, even with a great subsidy we can never build up a great merchant marine while continuing the American shipbuilding monopoly. Adopt my amendment and we will build a great merchant marine that will carry our goods to the far corners of the world without any subsidy, and we will build ships not only for our own merchantmen but for the trade of the world. As was said by the chairman of the Shipping Board, we can now dominate the shipbuilding of the world; but when we draw back into our shells and ask such protection as will enable our shipbuilders to demand and receive more for their ships than the builders of ships abroad, we will bid farewell to the dominion of the seas and to commercial supremacy as well. That will be the effect of this bill. I mean that under this bill American-built ships which then alone may carry the American flag will cost more than the British ship. Our merchants will suffer; our commerce will suffer. We will get back to the condition referred to by the gentleman from Michigan as the glorious condition before this war, when the commerce of the high seas will be carried by Great Britain and other nations whose merchants may get their ships anywhere in the world where they can buy them. Do we want that condition? That is the question that confronts us. If we want to go back to the laws of 60 years ago, under which we struggled and under which appeal after appeal was made for subsidy to this Congress, to which the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] referred, this bill will do the trick. Just as sure as you revert to the old practice of coddling our shipbuilders, just that sure we must look to a subsidy to support our flag and try to make up the difference between the cost of an American ship and a foreign ship under a foreign flag. That, gentlemen, is the choice that is offered us.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. If I have the time.

Mr. ALEXANDER. When the Shipping Board has carried out its program we will have between 14,000,000 and 15,000,000 tons of shipping under the American flag, paid for out of the Treasury of the United States with money contributed by the taxpayers of this country. Do you not think that then the problem will be what to do with our ships rather than to let foreign ships in at this time?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. My idea is that if we adopt this bill, and then adopt another bill practically confining the sales of Government-owned ships to American citizens, the result will be a combination of domestic shipowners under which they will beat down the Government and take the ships built by the Government for a nominal price and rob the people who have contributed of their sweat to the Treasury to build these ships. We built these ships and I am in favor of doing justice to our Government and offering those ships to the merchants of the world, and fixing the price by the Government at what the ships are worth, giving our own merchants a preference, but not a monopoly in purchasing. If we do that, our Government will get back dollar for dollar. They would get back every dollar we paid into our Treasury, and the American merchantman will go into competition with merchantmen all over the world and give what the ships are worth. But we want to beware of hobbling the American merchantmen. If our Government sells its ships in this way, our merchants will pay no more for their ships than their foreign competitors pay for theirs, and will be on an equal footing with them so far as ship cost goes.

Mr. EDMONDS. The gentleman knows that we are now selling ships to foreign account?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Yes; I understand we are, and in doing that we pursue a policy we refuse to other nations. England will buy these very ships from us if she can and put them in all her trade, and Norway will do it, but we refuse to let our merchants buy an English ship and put it in all our trade.

Mr. EDMONDS. The gentleman will find by reading the papers of this morning that the Italians and French are doing it, not England.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Any nation will do it. England has not had a law on her statute books for 50 years that forbade her merchants from buying any ship built anywhere and sailing it under her flag in any of her lines of trade, and we rightly propose to welcome them as ship-buying customers, and if we stand on our merits we will have them as customers. But if we begin to protect our shipbuilders from competition, we will cease to build for them. [Applause.]

I have filed on this bill the following report, which I hope will be of some interest to Members of Congress and readers of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

Mr. HARDY of Texas, from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, submitted the following minority report.

The undersigned member of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries respectfully submits the following minority report in opposition to the passage of H. R. 7500:

This bill proposes to repeal the act of October 6, 1917, which gave to the Shipping Board the power to permit vessels of foreign registry and foreign-built vessels under American registry to engage in the coastwise trade during the present war and for 120 days thereafter, except coastwise trade with Alaska. The undersigned believes that the act of October 6, 1917, should be amended so as to strike out the exception as to the Alaskan trade and strike out that part of the same admitting vessels of foreign registry to the coastwise trade, and by striking out the provision limiting its operation to the time of the present war and 120 days thereafter. It would then admit permanently to the coastwise trade all vessels under American registry.

In other words, it is believed that in order to build up and sustain an American merchant marine it is absolutely necessary to remove every restriction against American merchants acquiring ships, whether built in the United States or out of the United States, at the lowest possible price, in order to enable them to compete with other nations in the transportation of the commerce of the world. If our merchants are allowed to buy ships in the open world market and place them under American registry, with the privilege of using them both in the coastwise and overseas trade, it will inevitably follow that ships under the American flag will be bought as cheaply as ships under other flags.

On the other hand, if the American merchant shall be permitted to buy ships only from American builders in order to engage in our coastwise trade, it necessarily follows that every ship built in the United States will command a higher price than any foreign-built ship.

This may be very advantageous to the American shipbuilder, but it spells ruin to the American overseas merchant marine, and it means that we shall gradually go back to the conditions that existed prior to the great World War, under which ships flying the American flag carried only 8 per cent of the commerce between the United States and foreign countries.

Let me illustrate the operation of the old law and of the law as it would exist should the bill now under consideration be enacted: An American merchant desires to purchase a ship to use primarily in transportation between New York and Liverpool. He finds in the market for sale two ships; he makes a thorough examination of them and believes that they are precisely equal in actual value for transportation purposes and in every way they are worth the same money if he be allowed the privilege of using them equally or in the same trades; but one of these ships was built in England and the other in the United States, and upon examining the law he finds that if he buys the English ship he can only carry in it passengers or freight between American ports and foreign ports. He knows that should this vessel leaving New York be compelled to touch at any other American ports, say, Baltimore or Savannah, in order to obtain a full cargo, he would not be allowed to carry a single passenger or pound of freight from New York to either Baltimore or Savannah, while if he bought the American-built vessel he could freely carry and collect charges for carrying either freight or passengers from New York to Baltimore or Savannah.

Let me illustrate again: New York City is our great entrance port; if this merchant buys the English-built ship, when he returns from Liverpool with a cargo of imports to New York, he discharges his cargo there, and then finds he can not obtain enough cargo for his return trip to Liverpool to fill one-third his cargo space, and he must secure his remaining cargo, say, by taking cotton from Galveston, Tex.; necessarily he must make an unprofitable trip to Galveston and then make up his losses by higher freight on his cargo from Galveston. As a matter of fact, it is well known that many of the ships entering the port of New York full laden are compelled to go in ballast to other ports of the United States, like Savannah or New Orleans or Galveston, at an immense actual expense. Now, if our merchantman should buy the British-built vessel he knows that his transportation privileges under the proposed law would be restricted, just as those of a ship under a foreign flag would be, and as I have explained, but he knows also that if he bought the American-built ship he would be permitted when he had discharged his cargo at New York to take on cargo from there to Baltimore, Charleston, Mobile, New Orleans, or Galveston, earning rich compensation, and finally, say, at New Orleans, filling his cargo space with freight for Liverpool. Now, under these conditions does not the simplest man realize that the merchant will give at least 25 per cent more for the American-built ship than for the British-built ship?

If we wish to start back over the road which we traveled for 60 years before 1914 and try again to sustain an American merchant marine by requiring the American ship man to pay more for his ships than his competitor does, we have only to enact this bill unamended, and unless we are absolutely blind we must know that the result in the long run will be the gradual disappearance, a second time, of our flag from the seas.

I know that to pursue the policy which I favor will put our shipbuilders in actual and equal competition with the shipbuilders of the world, and I know that advocates of this bill claim that they can not compete. Mr. Hurley, the chairman of the Shipping Board, says emphatically that they can compete, and I have heard shipbuilders themselves declare that they could compete with English shipbuilders if they were able to standardize and build ships in quantity as the English shipbuilders do. I believe without any question our American shipbuilders can compete with the English shipbuilders. I believe so because the same argument was formerly made that our iron and steel manufacturers could not compete with foreign producers of shipbuilding material and that if the duty of 50 per cent was removed from this material England would furnish iron material to our shipbuilders. After a long, hard fight Congress did remove all duty on iron and steel shipbuilding material. The result was as I believed it would be; our iron and steel manufacturers entered competition and actually undersold the British manufacturers, and our shipbuilders bought all their material from our own manufacturers. Our American iron and steel manufacturers were unable to compete until they had to. When they had to they did compete successfully. Our shipbuilders can and will do likewise.

To-day the American shipbuilder has the advantage of having at his door the cheapest iron and steel material, the cheapest coal, and the cheapest wood material of any great nation of the world.

It is claimed that our high wages make us unable to build ships in competition with the world, yet England, which for years has been by far the highest-wage country of Europe, has built more ships than any other four countries of Europe. She has long since realized the folly of attempting to coddle her shipbuilders at the expense of her commerce, and at least for more than half a century she has permitted her merchants to buy ships where they could buy them cheapest, and use them freely without distinction as to where they were made, in all her trades. She is ready now to buy American-built ships and register them as English vessels, and use them to again build up her commercial supremacy and her national merchant marine.

This is a criticial period in the life of our merchant marine; if we yield to the demand of the shipbuilders we may as well bid farewell to any hope of success in the carrying trade of the world. If we stand out against their demands our shipyards, now splendidly equipped and splendidly furnished with the cheapest material of every kind for building, will enter upon an era of bold, manly competition and conquest of the empire of the seas. They will build not only for American merchantmen but for other nations of the world, and our ships will carry not only our fair share of commerce between ourselves and other nations, but they will carry a large share of the commerce between nations other than ourselves. That should be the goal of our ambition, but we should know once and for all that to reach it we must furnish the cheapest unit of transportation, and to do this the vessels we use must be obtained by our merchantmen at no greater cost than that paid by their competitors.

Once in the history of America, and that, too, notwithstanding we were then a high-wage country, we did carry three-quarters of our own foreign trade and a large part of the trade between foreign nations; we did it then because we used the best ships for their cost and developed the best seamanship of the world, and thereby furnished the cheapest unit of transportation. That was a glorious period for American shipping. There is a glorious opportunity now that may never come again for us to get back our dominion of the seas; a new era of shipbuilding is at hand. Much of the shipping of the Old World is antiquated. We have built and are building and putting into the trade new ships of new models, utilizing oil for fuel, carrying our fuel in the double bottoms of the vessels, saving bunker space required for coal-burning vessels, equipping with more modern devices for both loading and unloading, thereby enabling our ships to save nearly one-third in cargo space, to save more than one-half in the number of the crews required, and to economize in the length of time required for discharging and loading of cargoes. The older nations will be loath to discard their ancient, poorly equipped coal-burning vessels. If we wish to, we can now readily sell off our least desirable ships at good prices and retain for our own merchants only the best.

The time, the opportunity, is here; the sea is ours if we will take it. It is against the blindness that would throw away the opportunity by legislation such as contained in this bill that I warn the American people, and especially the American manufacturer whose goods seek the markets of the world and the American merchant who hopes to carry them.

It is not improper that while objecting to this bill I should say something as to what policy I think we ought to pursue in the interest of our commerce and our shipping and our shipbuilders. I have never believed that our commerce ought to be subordinated to our shipping or shipbuilders or that our shipping should be subordinated to our shipbuilders. Neither do I believe our shipbuilders should be, or need be, sacrificed in the interest of our commerce or our shipping. I believe they can all be aided by wise legislation. Our shipbuilders can be aided or at least not be hindered by a wise policy as to the disposition of ships owned by the Government, which we have built or acquired during the war. There is at this time such a wide and strong demand for ships, that in my judgment we can sell every ship we have except the wood ships, for all or more than all they cost us, provided we do not artificially restrict the market for them. Other nations are not foolish and have not forbidden their merchants buying our ships and placing them under their flags with all the privileges of ships built in their own country. England is eager to buy our ships. If we forbid it, we may invite combination by our private shipowners to beat down the price of the ships we have to sell, and if we restrict the rights of our shipyards to build for foreign ownership we may curtail their earning capacity. Our shipyards ought to be permitted to seek building contracts for all the world. If they are so permitted, in my judgment they can now secure contracts to keep them profitably employed to their fullest capacity for many years, and during that time they will become so firmly established that no nation on earth can ever take their business from them.

Our shipbuilders will build for the world as easily and as surely as our steel and iron manufacturers and thousands of our industrial plants furnish their products to the world.

I do not wish to continue our Government in the shipping business. I hope private owners will not compel it to do so by combining to force a loss on the Government in selling its ships. We have by Government operation of ships learned some lessons we ought not to forget. One of these is the subject of marine insurance.

During the war marine insurance of all kinds has been carried by the Government at 25 to 30 per cent less than private insurance rates, and yet at a profit of many millions. Insurance is not an industry; it is a business, but not a business of production. Properly, insurance is or should be only a means of distributing losses. All business of vast and wide extent has learned to carry its own losses, with only a bookkeeping expense over and above the actual aggregate losses. The Government has never insured any of its public buildings, because no insurer would or could insure them for a less aggregate premium than would cover with absolute certainty the aggregate losses. It may be found—our experience indicates it—that a Government insurance department, with authority to take marine risks, will help us to maintain our merchant marine when competition between us and other nations becomes close and earnest. I believe it will be so found. There is no question of Government ownership involved, and none of the real objections to Government ownership apply to such an insurance proposition, while the economies certain and sure might well tip the scales in favor of our shipping in the overseas transportation struggle that is coming.

Under the seamen's act and under conditions now existing wages on American and English vessels trading in American ports are substantially the same, and to sum up the whole matter we may if we will enter the struggle for foreign commerce and overseas transportation with newer and better ships as a whole than our competitors, costing us no more than the same class of ships cost them, with substantially the same cost for fuel and supplies and wages, and relative saving on the whole in the number of men employed to operate the ships, with as cheap or cheaper marine insurance and with a large volume of business, and it will be up to our merchantmen and our seamen to win in the overseas transportation field and help our manufacturers, farmers, and producers of all kinds win in the trade of the world.

The beneficiaries of special favor never sleep. Our shipbuilders take time by the forelock. Even now, when they can't fill orders for ships at enormous prices, they are trying to make it sure that they will have an absolute monopoly of building all the ships that fly the American flag. They can not wait till war conditions are ended to repeal the law that gives a foreign-built ship under American registry the right to engage in our coastwise trade. Owners of these ships were induced to buy or place them under our flag largely or wholly because they could so trade at least during the war and for 120 days thereafter. Have they been heard on this bill? Hearings of any kind seem only to have been had by a subcommittee and seem to me very meager. When we have boosted the price of American ships sufficiently the plea for subsidy to sustain our flag on the sea will be renewed.

The section giving foreign-built ships the right to carry passengers only between Hawaiian and United States ports, except Alaskan ports, by paying $40 tax per passenger, is a pitiful concession to the absolute necessities of the people of Hawaii. Our old coastwise laws, with this exception, are reinstated and clamped down with all their restrictions. Why the hurry? Cargo space is in great demand. Rates are sky-high. Is there not business enough for every ship now under our registry? Do we wish to favor railroads by lessening the available ship cargo space? The railroads and shipbuilders may clamor for this bill. It is against the interest of those who pay the freight. It may be wise to exclude ships under foreign registry from our coastwise trade in order to make of the coastwise privilege an inducement to vessels to come under our flag and to vessels now under our flag to remain under it.

When this bill is before the House I shall move to amend as follows:

After the word "repealed," on page 1, line 10, strike out the period and add these words "in so far as said act permits vessels of foreign registry to engage in the coastwise trade of the United States," and is amended by striking out of said act all provisions which limit the period of its operation.

And strike out all after the word "registry," on page 1, line 11, down to and including "1914," on page 2, lines 1 and 6. Strike out, on page 2, lines 12 to 18, inclusive, so that the bill as amended will read as follows:

"A bill to protect the coastwise trade of the United States, and for other purposes.

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the act entitled 'An act giving the United States Shipping Board power to suspend present provisions of law and permit vessels of foreign registry and foreign-built vessels admitted to American registry under the act of August 18, 1914, to engage in the coastwise trade during the present war and for a period of 120 days thereafter, except the coastwise trade with Alaska,' approved October 6, 1917, is repealed in so far as said act permits vessels of foreign registry to engage in the coastwise trade of the United States, and all provisions in said act limiting the period of its operation are repealed.

"SEC. 2. That vessels of foreign registry may carry passengers from or to ports in the Territory of Hawaii to or from ports in the United States upon special permits issued by the collector of customs for the district in which is situated the port of embarkation. Such permits shall be granted only upon payment to the collector of a fee of $40 for each passenger so carried. Such fees shall be paid into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts. The Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of Commerce shall jointly make regulations necessary for the issuance of such permits."

OF

HON. J. M. C. SMITH,

OF MICHIGAN.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, October 31, 1919.

On Senate concurrent resolution No. 15.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I take advantage of the privilege to extend my remarks in the RECORD on Senate concurrent resolution No. 15, and to say that this resolution, introduced by Senator THOMAS, of Colorado, and now before the House, ought to receive the unanimous and loyal support of every Member.

The great coal strike is now threatening to curtail or entirely stop the production of coal, which will have a disastrous effect not only upon the industries of the country but upon the consuming public, and cause suffering and great hardship upon the people if it be carried out in the spirit and intent of the strikers. The resolution itself pledges the unqualified support of the Government by use of such constitutional and lawful means as may be necessary to vindicate the law and thereby prevent riot and disorder in the present unrest and unsettled conditions.

The resolution is as follows:

Whereas the enforcement of the law and the maintenance of order for the security of life and property and the protection of the individual citizen in the exercise of his constitutional rights is the first and paramount duty of the Government and must be at all times vigorously and effectively safeguarded by the use of every means essential to that end: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That we hereby give the national administration and all others in authority the assurance of our constant, continuous, and unqualified support in the use of such constitutional and lawful means as may be necessary to meet the present industrial emergency and in vindicating the majesty and power of the Government in enforcing obedience to, and respect for, the Constitution and the laws, and in fully protecting every citizen in the maintenance and exercise of his lawful rights and the observance of his lawful obligations.

In such a great crisis as now threatens the country, it is difficult to see how anyone could be opposed to this resolution. I do not specify the steel strike, or the coal strike, or any strike, but claim that under all circumstances, in all cases, and in every emergency, we, as good patriotic citizens, ought to support the Constitution and uphold the supreme law of the land.

Especially is this true at a time like the present, when the minds of the people are sought to be poisoned against the Government, when the red flag is raised in our midst, when the I. W. W., the anarchist, and the Bolsheviki are taking advantage of the conditions after a great war to foment violence and discontent against the Government. Wherever the doctrine of disloyalty is found or advocated the strong arm of the law ought to be invoked to suppress it. No good, loyal, patriotic citizen would for one moment espouse the nefarious doctrine of Trotski and Lenine in this country. The doctrine advocated by them and by the Bolsheviki destroys the right of private ownership of property, the sanctity of the marriage vow, and advocates the overthrow of established government. It spreads anarchy and chaos in its wake. It seeks to restore the feudal system and leads to the unthinkable dogma that "might makes right." Whenever a blow is aimed at our established institutions or a great national calamity is threatened, then is the time for action. To vindicate the majesty and power of the Government, to enforce obedience to the Constitution and laws of the land, says the resolution. We are all for that.

I do not wish to convey the impression that the resolution is only applicable to the present situation. At any time and under any circumstances it bears the true American spirit. There is no greater Government on earth than that of the United States of America. There is no Government which offers more freedom and opportunities to its citizens than those available to the citizen under our Government. We should command respect for our courts and the law. They are the bulwark and foundation of the Republic. It is not out of place to remember what Commodore Decatur said, "My country; may she always be right, but, right or wrong, my country."

The resolution is not aimed at the prevention of strikes. It says nothing about strikes. It is a blow at intrigue and conspiracy, disorder, and revolution. It has its inception in peace. Continued and widespread disorder may result in declaring martial law throughout the land; but whatever the result the resolution has the unqualified support of the Congress and the general public.

I believe in the peaceful settlement of labor disputes. There is good authority for this position. On November 3 instant, the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers in their declaration of principles state:

We believe that there is no industrial dispute or misunderstanding that can not be adjusted upon a basis of justice and right, and we further believe that in seeking justice, justice should be practiced by all concerned.

No one can disagree with this declaration, and if that spirit were manifest and invoked in all labor disputes, strikes would be as scarce as the proverbial hen's teeth. If there ever was a strike that was not ultimately settled by agreement, if settled at all, it has not come to my attention. I am firmly of the belief that if a strike can be settled after a walkout has taken place there is no reason why it can not and should not be settled before a walkout. What can be done afterwards can be done before. No one pretends that a man can not quit work at any time and at his own option.

The coal strike is much more severe just on the verge of winter. It punishes those who are in no way responsible for the complaints of the miners, and who have no power to adjust or avoid it. I can only think of one instance that could produce more of a calamity than a general coal strike at this season of the year, and that would be for the farmers to strike at planting time and refuse to put out their crops. It would be unpatriotic in the highest degree for them to do so. There must be some way for the peaceful settlement of these labor disputes. At one time our country was subject to financial panics. Now we have solved that question by law. Financial panics are a thing of the past. In due course a remedy will be found to avoid strikes, walkouts, and lockouts. At the present time there are two strikes of great magnitude.

The steel strike was unwarranted, these men being the best paid of any industry in the country, with fair surroundings and reasonable hours of labor. The coal strike calls for a six-hour day with five days in a week. In a week there are 168 hours. Six hours a day for five days would be 30 hours' work a week. Six hours is not the ancient division of the day, which divides it into three parts and gives eight hours for work. I would not want my children to be brought up in the belief that they should work only six hours a day and only five such days a week; neither do I advocate such work time for others. No miner has been so brought up. But it seems to me that it might be an easy matter for the owners of the mines to determine whether or not the miners ought to have more pay for mining coal. If their pay is inadequate, it ought to be increased. If the conditions under which they labor are bad, they ought to be improved. It ought not to be necessary for them to strike to determine these questions. The extra charge of 50 cents a ton would readily be met by the consumers if it were paid to the miners, and if the additional 50 cents a ton was the only increase that would result to them; but the effect heretofore of increasing the pay for mining the coal seems to have given an opportunity for a multiplied increase all along the line until dimes added for the miners are manifold a number of times to the consumers.

Mr. Speaker, I have faith in the intelligence and patriotism of the American people. They must expect hardships to follow the coal strike, but out of this crisis and emergency the American flag will emerge without a blot or blemish, and the spirit of revolution and the seeds of disloyalty being spread broadcast in the land will be met by the carrying out of the foregoing resolution.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. BENIGNO C. HERNANDEZ,

OF NEW MEXICO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, November 5, 1919.

Mr. HERNANDEZ. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, Senate bill No. 681, which is now before the House, is an amendment to the act of March 4, 1913, in regard to certain public buildings throughout the country.

The act appropriates the sum of $295,000 for a public building at Santa Fe, N. Mex., the phraseology of which reads, "For the construction of a post office and courthouse." This amendment reads that the said building shall be for the accommodation of the post office and other governmental offices, exclusive of United States courts.

The sundry civil appropriation bill passed during this session of Congress carries in it an appropriation of $150,000 for the purpose of commencing the construction of said post-office building in Santa Fe, which at this time is very much needed in that city for the accommodation of the United States Land Office, the Forest Service, the field division of the Land Office, and the United States Weather Bureau, and for which the Government is now paying $6,600 a year rent, besides fuel for some of the offices that they are now renting.

The present Federal building is entirely inadequate to accommodate any other offices besides the United States courts and marshal's office.

Santa Fe is the capital city of the State of New Mexico; has been the seat of government for over 300 years, under three separate Governments; a city of about 10,000 inhabitants. The passage of this bill will enable the architect's office in the Treasury Department to formulate plans and specifications for such a building as in its judgment will meet the demands and purposes for which it is to be constructed.

	Rent.	Fuel and light.	Employees.
Post office	$1,800	.....	16
United States Land Office	1,500	.....	8
Forest Service office	1,200	$420	10
Chief Field Division of Forestry and Land Office	900	.....	19
United States Weather Bureau	780	.....	5
	6,180	420	58

SANTA FE, N. MEX., September 19, 1919.

Hon. B. C. HERNANDEZ,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Santa Fe post office pays $1,800 rent and has 16 employees. They will need 5,000 square feet of space. Business is growing. Half the mail matter goes franked. In 10 years will need double the space and twice as many employees. United States Land Office pays $1,500 rent and has eight employees. Forestry Service pays rent, $1,200; fuel and light, $420; and has 10 employees. Chief field division of forestry and land service pay $900 rent, has 19 employees, and needs 1,600 square feet of space. The Land Office needs 1,800 square feet of space and the Forestry Service needs 2,200 square feet of space. The United States Weather Bureau pays $780 rent, has 5 employees, and needs 1,200 feet of space. The Federal building will all be needed for the court, United States attorney, and United States marshal. It is now overcrowded, because the surveyor general's office is in it, which should be moved to and provided for in the new building. It will need at least 5,000 square feet of space. There is a United States county club clerk; one employee, salary of $100 per month. She now occupies room in county courthouse; also a United States county agency, who also occupies space in the county courthouse. These last two belong to the Agricultural Department. All these offices, except that of public lands, will fully double in their business and wants for space within the next 10 years. It is also economy to erect a building for the wants of these offices, limited to their present requirements. They should at least anticipate 10 or 15 years' growth, in which time they will require more than double the space now required. In addition, the collector of United States revenue, which now includes both the States of New Mexico and Arizona, in the office at Phoenix, is sure to be divided and an office at Santa Fe provided for New Mexico alone. This will require a large amount of space. I am sure that a building erected at the present rate of costs for the same can not be furnished to fill all the requirements of this State as they now exist and as they will exist at the end of the next 10 years for less than $400,000. The building should be constructed of the Moorish style of architecture. The Government now has a lot of ample size for the building which should be erected.

T. B. CATRON,
Ex-United States Senator.

[House Report No. 287, Sixty-sixth Congress, first session.]

Mr. THOMPSON of Ohio, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (S. 681) entitled "An act to amend an act approved March 4, 1913, entitled 'An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of certain public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, and for other purposes,'" having duly considered the same, hereby make a report of it to the House, with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred S. 681, a bill amending the act of Congress approved March 4, 1913 (37 Stats., 875), an act authorizing the erection of a building for the accommodation of the post office and United States courts at Santa Fe, N. Mex., recommends its adoption as an amendment to the act above referred to, so as to provide that said building shall be for the accommodation of the post office and other governmental offices, exclusive of the United States courts.

The amendment merely proposes to change the original act by eliminating the provision for the United States courts and for the reason that the courts are now being held in a Federal building at Santa Fe, N. Mex., which is adequate for the purpose.

The following letter to Congressman B. C. HERNANDEZ, of New Mexico, from the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury is self-explanatory:

"The department is in receipt of your letter of the 13th instant (August, 1919), requesting the status of the public-building project authorized March 4, 1913, for Santa Fe, N. Mex.

"The act referred to authorized the acquisition of a site and the construction of a post-office and courthouse building at Santa Fe at a limit of cost of $295,000. A site has been acquired, but no building has so far been constructed, for the reason that the courts are now located in a Federal building at Santa Fe, where they are desirous of remaining. Legislation has been pending proposing to eliminate the courts from the proposed new building, and, as you state, this legislation has now passed the Senate. If it receives favorable consideration in the House of Representatives and becomes a law, it will be possible for the department to begin the construction of the new post-office building at an early date.

"Respectfully,

"J. H. MOYLES,
"Assistant Secretary."

The Post Office Department is now renting a building which is absolutely inadequate for the accommodation of the post office at that city; they are also renting buildings for the accommodation of the United States Land Office and the Forest Service, and the building authorized by the act of March 4, 1913, is very much needed for the purposes herein mentioned.

The sundry civil appropriation bill carries an appropriation of $150,000 for the purpose of commencing the construction of said building on the site that has already been acquired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. EDWARD H. WASON,

OF NEW HAMPSHIRE,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, November 7, 1919.

Mr. WASON. Mr. Speaker, one of the branches of our administrative Government that has been recently established and charged with great and far-reaching responsibilities is the Bureau of War Risk Insurance. Most of us during the last two years have been in constant touch with this bureau in behalf of soldiers and their dependents. The task of establishing this bureau and getting it into a position of efficiency was a greater undertaking than any of us at the time of its establishment realized. Three different directors of this bureau have attempted this task, and during its existence its chaotic and unsatisfactory condition has been brought to the attention of Congress and the public generally.

A survey of the entire situation relative to this bureau would lead the unprejudiced mind to a conclusion that the efficiency of the bureau in its practical application has been slowly but steadily improving. The present director and his assistants are rapidly improving the service and efficiency thereof. There are reasons which led to confusion and mistakes that the bureau was not responsible for. I will not take time to comment on them except to say that they were partly due to transfer of authority for the payment of allotments and allowances from the Army to the bureau, and a retransfer later from the bureau back to the Army, where there were no allowances.

Since the demobilization of the Army the bureau's activities are largely with compensation and insurance claims, medical and surgical treatment, and prosthetic appliances, and the returned soldier, sailor, and marine is earnestly praying for information how to obtain assistance in this activity. To assist them in getting information as to where and how to apply for this aid, I have introduced a bill. The bill provides that the bureau's activities can be brought almost to his door, thereby saving him delays in getting communications, for instance, to the bureau from the Pacific coast and replies from Washington to him. The bill authorizes the appointment of 14 regional offices in the country and to those offices the soldier, sailor, and marine living within that regional division can communicate, furnish his evidence, and have his case promptly and expeditiously considered. It is really a bill authorizing the promulgation of necessary information to our soldiers, sailors, and marines how to proceed to get justice that was promised to them by our Government during the strenuous days while they were representing this Nation on the battle fields of France and elsewhere. This relief should be furnished as quickly and as efficiently as they gave their services to the great cause that this country was engaged in prior to November 11, 1918.

My experience with the bureau and an examination of complaints made to me by injured, maimed, and disabled heroes of that war leads me to the conclusion that if this bill is enacted into law their relief will come speedily and their hardships, by delay, inconvenience, and lack of information how and where to apply for relief, will be reduced to a minimum.

The following is the text of the bill:

A bill (H. R. 10365) for the purpose of improving the facilities and service of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Bureau of War Risk Insurance is hereby authorized to establish throughout the United States such regional offices, not exceeding 14 in number, and such suboffices as may be deemed necessary in the best interests of the work committed to said bureau.

SEC. 2. That the Bureau of War Risk Insurance is hereby authorized to advertise in such newspapers, magazines, periodicals, and other media as shall be deemed advisable in order to expeditiously acquaint all persons who are entitled to the benefits established by the war risk insurance act of their rights and privileges therein.

SEC. 3. Under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury and the Postmaster General may prescribe, the Postmaster General is hereby authorized to collect the war risk insurance premiums, and act for and turn over to the Secretary of the Treasury the money so collected, and also he is authorized to receive and transmit to the Bureau of War Risk Insurance applications for reinstatement of lapsed, or for converted, insurance. In making such collections he is hereby authorized to use postal money orders, postal notes, war risk insurance coupons, or any other method of collection which may be deemed most expedient and satisfactory.

SEC. 4. There is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated the sum of $2,000,000 to carry out the provisions herein specified in sections 1 and 2.

In connection with the above bill which I have introduced and has been referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce I wish to make the following statement regarding the operations of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance:

The accomplishments of this bureau are most amazing, and the operations for which they are responsible are very great and far-reaching in their importance.

Of course there have been mistakes; that is but natural. It is to be remembered, however, that during the very short period of the bureau's existence there have been created four of the largest businesses of their kind the world has ever known.

The figures are so great and the service which they represent so vital to our national life that they are worth referring to:

1. A marine and seamen's insurance company—
Doing a total business of	$2, 390, 080, 236. 54
With premiums collected amounting to	47, 592. 510. 61
Having issued 33,384 policies and paid claims to the extent of	28, 737, 146. 47
With a surplus over expenses and refunds of	17, 124, 903. 84
2. A stupendous banking business for the dependents of men in the service, making monthly payments of allotments and allowances on 2,057,842 awards during the period of a year and one-half exceeding	526, 000, 000. 00
3. An employers' liability company—
Now making payments each month on claims for compensation to the extent of	2, 410, 271. 91
Having paid burial expenses amounting to	1, 834, 763. 33
4. The largest insurance company in the world—
Having written during the period of one year and a half 4,561,974 individual policies, representing a total amount of insurance of	39, 817, 391, 500. 00
With premiums between Oct. 6, 1917, and Sept. 30, 1919, of approximately	233, 599, 432. 95
With claims payable to the extent of	1, 035, 958, 004. 48

Up to June 30, 1919, the cost of administration of the bureau had been approximately $19,000,000, which, as you can see, has been almost covered by the profit of approximately $17,000,000 on the business done under the marine and seamen's feature of the act.

Outsiders who are constantly making statements as to the great expense of maintaining the bureau and the carrying out of the provisions of the war-risk insurance act entirely ignore the fact that up to June 30 the net cost was approximately but $2,000,000, not including appropriations for Government allowances or compensation.

How successful is the Government of the United States to be in making good its trust to all those who, by reason of their active military and naval service during the recent World War, are entitled to further protection under the war-risk act?

The Members of this House recall very clearly how during the fall of 1917 certain amendments were added to the original war-risk act which were designed to provide for the dependent relatives of the entire enlisted personnel of the Army and Navy and Marine Corps during the period of their enlistment. This was accomplished by the establishment of a system of Government allowances based on an allotment made by the enlisted man to his dependent relatives.

Further provision was made that, should anyone in the active military or naval service, and in the line of duty, become disabled or be killed, in the first instance he, and in the second instance his dependent relatives within the permitted class, should receive Government compensation for either the lifetime of the soldier, sailor, or marine, or, for the dependent relatives within the permitted class, during the period of their dependency.

The war-risk insurance act further provides that—in addition to the compensation above provided, the injured person shall be furnished by the United States such reasonable governmental medical, surgical, and hospital services, and with such supplies, including artificial limbs, trusses, and similar appliances, as the director may determine to be useful and reasonably necessary.

Under this provision of the act, the Bureau of War Risk Insurance now has 6,857 cases under treatment in hospitals. In addition to medical and surgical treatment, the bureau had on October 24 furnished 1,548 artificial limbs.

In addition to the Government's provisions for allowances and compensation, it has made possible the added protection of war-risk insurance.

WAR-RISK INSURANCE.

Resulting from the Government's campaign to have all those in the military and naval service and their dependent relatives protected to the extent of $10,000, an average war-risk insurance policy of $8,700 was written on the lives of our entire military and naval forces.

Up to October 24, 1919, $39,891,350,500 war-risk insurance has been issued on the lives of 4,572,883 members of the United States military and naval forces.

Resulting from this insurance feature of the war-risk insurance act the dependent relatives of 117,042 men who lost their lives in line of duty are receiving monthly installments of not more than $57.50 for a period of 20 years, and 611 men who have become totally and permanently disabled in line of duty will themselves receive during the period of their lifetime, in addition to their compensation, monthly payments of $5.75 on each $1,000 of insurance carried.

Approximately $250,000,000 has been collected in premiums paid for war-risk insurance, and the total computed value of the Government's obligation in the death and disability claims as reviewed above, as of October 24, totals $1,061,711,673.48.

During the period of the war the bureau's greatest difficulty was that of administration, by reason of the fact that proper housing facilities were not available in Washington. Nor was it possible to secure an adequate clerical and executive personnel.

The war-risk act was the first "employers' liability law" ever enacted which did not allow a period of 6 to 12 months in which to perfect organization and administrative policies. The war-risk act was immediately effective upon passage, October 6, 1917, and retroactive in the fact of there being more than 1,500,000 men in service at the time of its passage.

PROBLEMS ARISING FROM DEMOBILIZATION.

You can appreciate that during the war the bureau dealt with soldiers, sailors, and marines on the wholesale basis, for all communications were handled through the official channels of the Military and Naval Establishments. It was the bureau's principal task then to see that the allotments made by the service men, with the Government allowances, were paid regularly to the proper dependent relatives.

Since the signing of the armistice November 11, 1918, and the vast demobilization of the military and naval forces the service of the bureau has been very much magnified by the fact that there are now more than 4,000,000 men returned to civil life who individually look to the Government to make good an obligation. During the period of enlistment the welfare of each man was fully protected, every attention being paid to the man's physical condition, to his military equipment, and to the Government allowances paid to his dependent relatives. If while in the service the man had a physical ailment of any sort, either of a serious or an insignificant character, immediately he was given such medical or surgical treatment as his condition might require. If his shoes were worn out, he got new shoes. If his gun was broken, he was supplied with a new gun. His very acts were heralded by word of mouth and in printed form throughout all the world. And now that his service to the Government has been completed, how difficult or how easy is it being made for this same man to get the proper service to which he is justly entitled at the hands of his Government?

While it is true that many men are in very much better physical condition by reason of their active military and naval service, there are many thousands whose health has been impaired by this same service. Where are those men to be found now that they are demobilized? What is the condition of their health and what facilities is the Government, through the bureau, putting at their disposal in order that they may, without delay, receive proper medical or surgical treatment for safeguarding life and health?

Many complaints have come to me because of apparent delay upon the part of the bureau in giving service. Much of this complaint is caused, in my opinion, by reason of the fact that at the present time the bureau's only method of reaching these men, who are scattered in every county and every town in the United States, is by direct written communication from Washington. If it were possible for the bureau to know the names and addresses of those whose health, in fact, has been impaired, it might be a different thing, but this information must be supplied to the bureau by the men themselves. And so it is that a man goes about day after day without proper care and treatment until after much suffering and complaint his condition is called to the attention of the bureau through devious channels, and then, late though it is, the bureau seizes its first opportunity of serving the man by sending him a written communication. If the man lives in the State of Washington, it means days before the letter reaches him and days before the letter gets back, and then more days before the man can receive any real satisfaction at the hands of the Government.

CONFUSION AS TO THE BUREAU'S SCOPE.

While we in Washington are very familiar with the name of the Treasury Department and the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, we are assuming too much if we believe that many of the more than 4,000,000 men who recently have been demobilized realize that all of these services of the Government—(a) allotment and allowance; (b) compensation and insurance claims; (c) medical and surgical treatment; (d) prosthetic appliances; (e) insurance—are administered by the Bureau of War Risk Insurance. All that these men know is that they were in Company B, One hundred and fifteenth Infantry, of the Ninety-ninth Division, their top sergeant was named Murphy, and their captain Johnson. During their active service they were taught the methods of modern warfare in all its horrible detail, but they were not schooled as to the procedure of the various administrative departments of the Government. So it is that a majority of the men who have been demobilized are in total ignorance as to just whom they should communicate with in regard to the various services to which they are entitled as the result of their active military or naval service. Also, they find it difficult to differentiate between compensation and insurance or to realize that compensation and insurance are separate and distinct.

In addition to the service rendered by the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, the Government has provided for the vocational training of those who have, by reason of their injuries received in line of duty, need of further attention, in order that they may again follow some gainful occupation.

If we are to assume that all the ex-service men know they should address their communications regarding allotment and allowance, compensation claims, medical and surgical treatment, prosthetic appliances, and insurance to the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, how are they to know what bureau or department of the Government is responsible for the vocational training?

The truth is there is very much confusion, and it is all at the expense of the discharged soldier, sailor, or marine. The contrast between the Government's interest in the man while he was in the service and now that he is discharged is very conspicuous in the minds of our ex-soldiers, sailors, and marines. During the draft and during the men's active service the Government's entire interest was in the welfare of the men, and, fulfilling this responsibility, the Government always took the initiative. Now that the men are discharged they feel that they are forgotten, unless through their own initiative and keen intelligence they find the proper department or bureau of the Government to which they should make application for service in order to receive the benefits to which they are entitled under the act.

So much suffering and complaint has been caused by reason of the Government's inability to reach the men and by reason of the confusion in the minds of those who finally get in touch with either the Vocational Board, Public Health, or Bureau of War Risk Insurance that the director of the bureau recently called a conference in his office of the heads of the Vocational Board, Public Health Service, the Red Cross, and the bureau for the purpose of coordinating the various services of the field.

At the present time the field services of the Vocational Board and Public Health are divided into 13 regional districts, with 13 district managers or supervisors. In addition to this they have their suboffices, which report to the regional headquarters for that district.

The Bureau of War Risk Insurance, however, is authorized by law to have only eight temporary branch offices and no suboffices.

In nearly all of the large cities in which a branch office of the bureau is located there is also one of the regional offices of the Vocational Board and the Public Health Service. The exceptions to this are in Texas, where the Public Health Service has its regional office in Houston and the Vocational Board and the Bureau of War Risk Insurance are located in Dallas, and in the Northwest, where the Public Health Service has its office in St. Paul, while the Vocational Board has its office in Minneapolis.

But even within the cities where the Vocational Board, Public Health Service, and the Bureau of War Risk Insurance all have their offices it is an exceptional case where any two of these three bureaus are in the same building, and in nearly every instance all three are in separate buildings, compelling the ex-service man, if you please, to travel from building to building, or from city to city, as the case may be, in order to get the necessary attention and treatment.

This emphasizes my point that whereas everything was done for the convenience of the soldier during the period of enlistment, the soldiers, sailors, and marines who have returned to civil life feel that the Government is now only theoretically concerned as to their convenience or welfare after they have been discharged.

CONFERENCE ON COORDINATION.

As a result of the conference to which I have referred, held in the office of the Director of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, between the Vocational Board, Public Health Service, Red Cross, and officials of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, immediate arrangements are being made to have the regional offices of these three bureaus located in the same building, or, at least, in the same city. The director has reason to believe that this will be accomplished in the very near future, since each of the organizations is exceedingly enthusiastic over the practicality and the value of the director's suggestion for such consolidation. Incidentally, by the coordination of these three services each will be able to use the records of the others, and thereby save the ex-soldier, sailor, or marine from making out many duplicate records and undergoing several physical examinations when, in fact, one might suffice.

Under the present restrictions the Bureau of War Risk Insurance is compelled to handle its entire operations by written communication. Since the 1st of January it has received, I am advised, 5,000,000 separate communications and has sent out several times that number. A large part of this correspondence represents a shameful waste of time and money and equipment, including a disproportionately large personnel.

The men write to the bureau, asking, "Why haven't I received the Liberty bond for which I subscribed when I was in the Army?" These communications, of course, are forwarded by the bureau to the War Department for attention, and the bureau writes to the soldier advising him that his letter has been forwarded to the War Department or the Navy Department. The War Department or Navy Department receives a communication about a war-risk allotment, and, in turn, forwards it to the bureau. A man receiving training under the Vocational Board complains bitterly that he is not receiving his check for compensation, when, in fact, he never has made application to the bureau, which is wholly unaware of his disabled condition. Insurance premiums are being sent to the various departments of the Government and to the soldier's last commanding officer, hoping that they will finally reach the proper destination. What a woeful waste this is, and how unfair it makes the Government appear in the eyes of these hundreds of thousands of men who have given their all in the interest and for the protection of their Government.

NEED OF DECENTRALIZATION.

It is absolutely essential that the Bureau of War Risk Insurance should be allowed to decentralize its activities by the establishment of at least 13 regional offices, to be located in the same cities and in the same buildings with the regional offices of the Vocational Board, Public Health Service, and the Red Cross. These regional offices would be responsible for the conduct of the work of the bureau throughout their respective territories, it being left to the headquarters in Washington to make the final awards, and to send the payments directly from Washington to the beneficiaries. In fact, in addition to these regional offices, the bureau, like the Public Health Service and Vocational Board, should be allowed to establish such temporary suboffices as may be necessary in the interest of the service.

NEED FOR AND ECONOMY OF ADVERTISING.

How are the ex-soldiers, sailors, or marines, or their dependents, to know how to benefit by these services of the Government which have been made available by Congress? At the present time the Government's only method is by the printing of circulars and pamphlets, which is the slowest and most costly method. In the first place, approximately 30 per cent of all such literature mailed is returned because of a change in the man's address. Furthermore, this method necessitates the printing of, literally, millions of circulars and folders, through the Government Printing Office, and that bureau, notwithstanding the effort at cooperation, takes weeks and weeks to deliver the material, and then can deliver only so many thousand at a time. Assuming, for instance, that the so-called Sweet bill, H. R. 8778, which increases the compensation to disabled soldiers, should pass on December 1, and it were possible on that same day to send to the Government Print Shop an order for so many hundred thousand or million circulars or pamphlets explaining the provisions of the bill, this matter would, in all probability, not be delivered to the War Risk Bureau before the expiration of six weeks. That would mean the bureau would not begin to send out this information until the second week in January. In the meantime the bureau would have used a large clerical personnel for the addressing of this same large quantity of envelopes, and then the circulars would have to be inserted in the envelopes and mailed. At this rate it would be two months from the date of passage of the bill before circulars containing a statement of its provisions could reach former service men. And in direct ratio to this delay would the message fail in potency and the disgust of service men at such slow processes increase.

In the opinion of the director it is absolutely essential, both from the standpoint of economy and service, that the Government announce by public advertisements in the newspapers, county, city, and State, as well as by other standard forms of advertising, such as magazines or billboards, exactly the service which the bureau has to render to the men who served so magnificently during the war.

Reverting to the theory that the so-called Sweet bill, H. R. 8778, will become a law on the 1st of December, and assuming, as we did in the first instance, that the announcement will be prepared in advance by the use of public advertising, this announcement could be made throughout all parts of the United States within 48 hours after the passing of the act. There would immediately be established a community and national consciousness as to the service being rendered by the Government under this act of Congress. And so at proper intervals other public announcements would be made by advertising that the men who were directly affected might know what steps to take, and also that their relatives and friends might have knowledge whereby to help them. This applies equally to the compensation and claims feature of the war-risk insurance act as it does to the insurance program. I venture to say that there are comparatively few men who have been discharged from the service who actually know what are their privileges under the insurance feature of the act, to whom, and how they are to pay premiums; whether or not the insurance is to be issued by the Government or through private companies, or what are the features of the converted policies. I wonder how many Members of this House are themselves correctly informed regarding the various features of the war-risk insurance act, including compensation, medical and surgical treatment, prosthetic appliances, and the new Government insurance to which the term war-risk insurance may be converted; and yet we have been heavily burdened with correspondence on the subject. How, then, can the "doughboy" or "gob" be expected to be endowed with such intelligence?

In connection with the payment of premiums under the war-risk insurance act Congress is asked for authority to collect premiums through the post offices without making an extra charge to the insured for the service. It seems most logical that, since the Post Office Department is itself another branch of the Government, its service might be made available for this purpose.

It is the policy of the Director of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, so far as practicable, to use to the fullest extent all other already established agencies of the Government in accomplishing the service to be rendered under the war-risk insurance act. For instance, the bureau is itself held entirely responsible for furnishing such reasonable governmental medical, surgical, and hospital services, with such supplies, including artificial limbs, trusses, and similar appliances, as may be necessary. In performing this task, the bureau has called upon the United States Public Health Service to aid to the fullest extent of its ability and equipment. The Director of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance is also making every effort to effect the coordination of all the regional field offices of the Vocational Board, Public Health Service, and Red Cross.

And it is the director's conviction that if allowed a reasonable appropriation for advertising, he could by constructive "copy" create in a short time a community and national intelligence on these very important but confusing phases of service. To accomplish the desired result by advertising instead of by the printing of hundreds of thousands of copies of booklets and circulars, I am thoroughly convinced that a great financial saving would be made and a great economy of time, equipment, and personnel would result therefrom, together with a quick clean-up of all after-war problems in regard to the benefits under the war-risk insurance act.

Under the present management of the bureau real economies are being instituted in method of operation, equipment, and personnel, and it is most essential that the director of the bureau be given the proper facilities to expedite the service, the responsibility for which Congress has imposed upon the bureau.

The additional expenditure which these suggested changes would entail would be $2,000,000, and within the current fiscal year such disbursement would, I am satisfied, prove a real economy and a blessing to our disabled patriots of the World War.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. THOMAS H. CULLEN,
OF NEW YORK,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, November 10, 1919.

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Speaker, just a word. "This is a good bill." This bill, which is about to pass the House, is really the first bill of a real constructive nature that has been presented to the House for our consideration during the present session. The committee who have had it under consideration deserve much praise and credit for developing the bill. I presume that it will be amended further as time goes on, to strengthen it or remedy any defects that may possibly be necessary.

During the war the slogan was, "Ships, ships, and more ships to win the war." The Government, through the Shipping Board and shipbuilding plants throughout the country, answered the call. Now that the war is over, the slogan should be "Ships to carry our goods across the seas." I hope to see our flag restored to the high seas in our merchant marine. The wise provision of selling our ships to American citizens is a good one. It will restore our supremacy in the shipping world. That is as it should be. I want to see Old Glory flying at the masthead in our merchant marine in every port and harbor on the face of the globe. And in that connection our great harbor and port of New York should be developed to receive them. Jamaica Bay, in the port of New York, offers the opportunities. It should be developed at once. To-day our harbor in the city of New York is congested. There is not enough dock space for the dockage of our ships. This should be remedied. The great city of New York, the State of New York, and our Government should be working together to bring about the desired results. Less talk and more action and cooperation are needed to the end that our merchant marine shall be supreme and our docking facilities in the city of New York the best in the world.

OF
HON. WILLIAM N. VAILE,
OF COLORADO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, November 7, 1919,

On the bill (H. R. 6870) to provide for a library information service in the Bureau of Education.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Speaker, in the hearings before the House Committee on Education Miss Edith Guerrier, of the Boston Public Library, advocating the passage of House bill 6870, rendered a distinctive public service by her carefully prepared and excellently arranged presentation of the necessity for a division of library service. The reading of Miss Guerrier's paper will amply repay the slight expenditure of time required. She shows that in 1918 the Government Printing Office issued over 300,000,000 publications, at an expense of more than $5,000,000, these publications treating almost every field of human knowledge, ranging in character from motion pictures to bulletins on poultry-house construction, and being issued not only by Congress and the departments but by some 40 boards, commissions, and bureaus.

Much of this matter is of great educational value in schools, all of it is of educational value to the persons for whom it is intended, and yet a large part of it is annually wasted because our distribution methods are not adequate. As Miss Guerrier puts it, all effort is centered on production, and there is little or no intelligent "selling of the goods."

The Joint Committee on Printing of this Congress has stated that during the 15 years from 1895 to 1909, inclusive, there were returned by libraries to the superintendent of documents a total of 1,579,164 documents which had been received in duplication or had been discarded as obsolete or useless. On the other hand, a great deal is printed which would be eagerly taken if the public was fully informed of its existence. I recently sent to every physician in my district a list of the bulletins issued by the United States Public Health Service, together with a letter asking them to designate what particular bulletins they desired. The response was immediate and enthusiastic, and indicated what was rather surprising to me, namely, that these professional men, typical of the best intelligence in the community, were not generally advised of the wealth of material published by their Government and at their disposal for the asking. Every Member from a rural district knows how eagerly the bulletins of the Department of Agriculture are sought and how little the general public still appreciates the opportunities presented by this great educational service, notwithstanding it has been carried on by the department for a great many years.

The purpose of this bill is to open the doors of these great storehouses to all the people. In that sprightly and veracious criticism of our customs, "As a Chinaman Saw Us," published some 15 years ago, the oriental scholar says:

> There is in America a class of literateurs who are rarely heard of by the masses, but to my mind they are among the greatest and most advanced Americans. They are the astronomers, geologists, zoologists, ornithologists, and others, authors of papers and articles in the Government reports of priceless value. These writers appear to me, an outsider, to be the real safety valves, the real backbone, of the literary productions of the day. With them science is but a synonym of truth; they fling all superstition and ignorance to the winds, and should be better known. Such names as Edison, Cope, Marsh, Hall, Young, Field, Baird, Agassiz, and 50 more might be mentioned, all authors whose books will give them undying fame, men who have devoted a lifetime to research and the accumulation of knowledge; yet the author of the last novel, "My Mule from New Jersey," will, for the day, have more vogue among the people than any of these.

Miss Guerrier, in her concise but most inclusive paper, classifies the present means of distribution of this material as follows: Depository libraries, about 480 in number, which have been designated by Congressmen to receive each month all matter issued by the Government Printing Office except confidential matter, congressional bills, and hearings; quotas apportioned to Congressmen for distribution by them; distribution direct by departments on lists kept by them, now comprising about 1,000,000 names; distribution on individual requests; sale by the superintendent of documents.

It will appear that a large part of the distribution is now controlled by Congressmen through their designation of depository libraries, through direct distribution, and by causing names to be put on the department lists. The bill under consideration would not in the least abridge this privilege. Nor does it contemplate any increase in the total amount of Government printing. There is one kind of congressional distribution which is not specifically referred to in Miss Guerrier's memorandum. For a great many years it has been the policy of the Government to promote publicity of the proceedings of Congress. Each Member is allowed, for distribution where he sees fit, 60 copies of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as it is published, and these are sent daily to the persons designated by him to receive it. The RECORD is an expensive publication. The cost of sending it gratuitously to millions of people would be prohibitive. Furthermore, the whole of the proceedings would not directly interest a great many people. On the other hand, a great many people are interested in knowing how their own Congressman is discharging his stewardship. This is done by permitting the Congressman to reprint portions of the RECORD at his own expense and to send such reprints through the mails under the franking privilege. I believe that the expense to the Government involved in this distribution (especially since it is curbed by the requirement that the reprint be done at the Member's expense) is justified by the resulting information to the public, although I may cite one instance as an odd sidelight on a certain kind of popular view. I have been sharply criticized by a Democratic paper in Colorado, the Greeley News, for reprinting a speech of only 31 lines on a subject, "Mountain Parks," of great interest to my district and to the State. Possibly, however, the objection in this case was merely personal or political, as my distinguished predecessor, who was complimentarily referred to in the same editorial paragraph, escaped without any mention whatsoever of a "speech" printed under the privilege of "extension of remarks" and widely circulated throughout Colorado, which occupied more than four full columns of the RECORD and was principally devoted to an attack upon myself and the other gentlemen who were opposing him in his then pending campaign for reelection.

Naturally, since a Member pays for such reprints himself, he usually reprints chiefly his own remarks. They are his own declarations, not only to his colleagues but to the country. By them, and not by the remarks of some one else, he must be judged. He has a right to inform his constituents and his constituents have a right to know what he has said and done.

I have, however, reprinted not only my own remarks on the "oil-leasing bill" but enough from the speeches of other Members to show the course of the debate on certain sections of that measure, enough, I believe, to fairly present the views of those other Members.

The discussion quoted is on: (1) The general purpose of the bill; (2) an amendment by myself to permit the issuance of more than one lease to a single application without increasing his total holdings; (3) an amendment by myself to make a separate section of certain provisions of the act; (4) the effect of section 32 and also of section 35 which relates to the distribution between the Federal Government and the States of the royalties derived from the leases, and three proposed amendments to section 35, together with parts of the argument, resulting in the adoption of one of them as a compromise; (5) the meaning of certain terms in section 37.

The other Members quoted in this reprint, and whose remarks comprise more than one-half of it, are: Hon. N. J. SINNOTT, Republican, of Oregon, chairman of the House Committee on the Public Lands; Hon. W. R. GREEN, Republican, of Iowa; Hon. F. W. MONDELL, Republican, of Wyoming; Hon. SCOTT FERRIS, Democrat, of Oklahoma; Hon. HENRY E. BARBOUR, Republican, of California; Hon. BERTRAND H. SNELL, Republican, of New York; Hon. JAMES H. MAYS, Democrat, of Utah; Hon. CHARLES R. EVANS, Democrat, of Nevada; Hon. MILTON H. WELLING, Democrat, of Utah. The speeches of all of these gentlemen would repay careful reading, and I regret that I am unable to reprint them in full. It will be noted that the division was not on party lines.

Another privilege of a Member is to "extend" his remarks in the RECORD, that is, get leave to print them without having actually delivered them upon the floor. This practice has been established for many years and its purpose is commendable. A Congressman should have the right—indeed, it is often his duty—to make his views publicly known, for the information both of his constituents and of the House. Yet it is obviously impossible that the views of every Congressman on every subject can actually be spoken on the floor and still leave time for the transaction of business. Popular prejudice to the contrary notwithstanding, Congress works more than it talks. The pages of the RECORD afford a convenient and useful forum for the submission of written arguments as well as spoken arguments, and the former, carefully prepared and digested, are often more convincing than the latter. Such written arguments have the further great advantage that they may, like a lawyer's briefs, be submitted and considered in advance of the oral argument, and at a time when there is better opportunity for calm and dispassionate judgment. Correspondence, statistical matter—most informative in character but not adapted to the medium of oral debate—may be thus submitted to consideration.

The privilege is conferred by unanimous consent. The consent is seldom refused unless it is supposed that the Member requesting it is likely to abuse it by greatly encumbering the RECORD or by inserting improper matter.

Of necessity the question of what is improper matter must rest largely with the conscience of the Member making or the Member opposing the unanimous-consent request. Many abuses of the privilege have occurred, but in the great majority of cases it has been exercised with at least reasonable regard to the proprieties. My own opinion is that it should be exercised sparingly. I should regard it as an abuse to fill 30 pages of the RECORD with self-laudatory telegrams, as has been done at this session. I would regard it as a fair and proper use of the privilege to present an argument or brief in support of, or in opposition to, a pending measure, or a discussion of a matter of public interest by the Member himself or by some other person whose words are pertinent and worthy of consideration.

It is regarded as unfair and incompatible with the spirit of equal rights, which should prevail, for a Member to object to the request for unanimous consent merely because he does not agree with the political views of the Member making the request. However, if the objecting Member has reason to anticipate that the remarks for which the privilege of extension is asked will be violently and offensively partisan in tone or unfairly critical of members of his own party, he may feel that the situation justifies his refusal of the unanimous consent. In Congress, as in all other deliberative bodies, much must be left to the individual's sense of generosity, propriety, and fair play.

It is my intention when reprinting matter which has been published in the RECORD under the label "Extension of remarks" to see that it bears the same label when it is sent to my constituents. That the matter is of such character justifies no concealment, because it requires no apology. That is the character of the preceding paragraphs.

The bill for the establishment of the library service, of course, has no effect on the privileges of reprinting just referred to. It aims merely to insure a greater usefulness for what is printed by establishing an office, with "a director who is acquainted with the possibilities, needs, and problems of large and small libraries in different sections of the United States," an office which should maintain connections with those libraries, superintend selective distribution of material, and prepare catalogue cards to be sent with such material, so that it shall be available for distribution as soon as received, keep address lists of public, school, and college libraries, maintain current available files of all Government publications, furnish information to and attend to requests of libraries throughout the country, and, in short, to do all that may help "to connect our great democratic Government with the humblest citizen, to help our people to think before criticizing, to know instead of jumping to a conclusion, and to take that just pride in the greatest Government in the world which the authentic story of its functions and acts is sure to produce."

I believe the bill is meritorious and that it should pass.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. KING SWOPE,

OF KENTUCKY,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, November 10, 1919.

Mr. SWOPE. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, five years ago the greatest scourge that ever cursed humanity spread its ominous cloud over the great nations of Europe until it was apparent that it was going to engulf the whole world. For three years we earnestly hoped and fervently prayed that the cup might pass, but in spite of our hopes and our prayers the cup was finally pressed to our lips and drained to the dregs.

We were compelled in a limited time to transform, as if by a magician's wand, a great peaceful Nation into a Nation of warriors. Our young men turned their backs to education and bright futures, bade their parents and loved ones good-by, and fell in beneath Old Glory to show the world that we have not only inherited that liberty of our forefathers but also the will and power to maintain it.

For more than a year those boys grappled with and finally defeated the most brutal and powerful army that ever shook the earth beneath its martial tread. And for that great victory, for the great blessings of liberty and peace we enjoy to-day, we owe to those men who so valiantly offered themselves as a sacrifice upon the altar of liberty and freedom. Whether they paid the last full measure on the field of battle, whether they died in hospitals on this side of the Atlantic, whether they returned home crippled or disqualified, whether they returned home safely, they were in the service and nobly did their part.

During the terrible conflict, while the glamour of war colored with the bright hues of an anticipated victory was before us, everyone was wont to say, "Nothing is too good or too much for the soldiers." Now that the war is won and the victory is a magnificent reality, we hear it occasionally ventured by some that "The soldiers expect too much."

What do the soldiers expect? What do they want? All they want and all they expect is a square deal. I have heard it said that we can never repay them for their patriotism and their sacrifice. Of course we can not pay them for their patriotism, their sacrifice, and their heroism, but we can in a measure pay them for their time in something like its commercial value, and for fear that the propaganda of some, whose proclivities are decidedly toward the slackers, might obtain any undesired footing, I invite your attention to these facts: First, the greater portion of our Army was composed of enlisted men who came from remunerative jobs. The pay of the private soldier is $30 a month, and that of a noncommissioned officer very little more.

If the soldier had a wife or a child, he had to allot $15 of the $30 each month. Then, if he wanted insurance, as he doubtless did, he would have deducted about $6.60 more, depending on his age, leaving a flat sum of $8.40 to provide for his personal comfort, and from which he would have to save if he desired to have anything to start on after being discharged. Under those conditions the best financier in the world could have saved nothing to start on.

On the other hand, the soldier's wife received but $15 allotted to her by her husband, plus the $15 allowance from the Government, making a total of $30 per month for her to live on in these days of exorbitant prices. When did the Government get the idea that a soldier's wife is a better financier than the wife of anyone else? Why should she be a better financier than the wife of a railroad employee who complains that he can not live on $8 a day and threatens to strike and tie up the interstate business of the whole Nation? Why should she be more economical than the wife of a departmental clerk, who has received since the war was declared $120 bonus and another $240 bonus, making $360, which is the maximum bonus proposed under the bill I have introduced for the soldiers, sailors, marines, and nurses? While these departmental clerks and employees no doubt deserve the increase in salary, yet the men who enlisted, trained, suffered, and brought about the great victory are a thousand times more entitled to extra pay for their time than those who actually received it.

Now, those are some of the facts in the case.

I have often been asked by those who were not in the service how the soldiers regard extra compensation. I can say for the great Army of American soldiers that they do not regard it as a bonus or a gift, or even charity, but simply as back pay for time that is rightfully theirs. I have even heard it said by some who never put in a day of service and whose lack of knowledge of the soldiers was evidenced by their statements that a bonus would be an insult to the soldiers.

I confess that a $60 bonus is inadequate enough to insult any man who has put in a year or more for his country and who was discharged without funds or a job. But it did not insult anyone. They applied for it and were glad to get it, small though it was. It was not even enough to equip a discharged soldier in civilian clothing, to say nothing of tiding him over to a job. I have known instances where soldiers discharged practically penniless were unable to get a civilian job due to the fact that they did not have civilian clothing and the employers would not employ them as long as they wore uniforms.

With your indulgence I will read a letter from a discharged marine that very well illustrates that condition:

DIXIE, GA., September 9, 1919.

Hon. KING SWOPE,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Having seen in to-day's paper that you had introduced a bill to give a year's pay at the rate of $30 per month to the United States veterans of the World War, I could not resist the inclination to write and thank you for your recognition of the fact that our services were worth more than we were paid.

Two motives prompted me in writing this letter. Primarily I was glad to learn that there was yet one person in our legislative department of the Government who has not so easily and readily forgotten the hardships which we had to encounter for the sake of our Nation and people. Too many men in Government offices to-day are only glad to forget our meager affairs and leave us groping in the dark for something we feel worthy of. Secondarily, I feel justified in saying that the work was unreasonable for the amount we received in pay. Most men were compelled to leave their homes and good-paying jobs and were made to accept a position of the most exposing kind for the lowest possible salary. Many of these men left debts at home which they were working hard to pay, and who have come home at last only to find that the interest on said debts are a figure themselves; and these men have come home without money to settle the accounts left unpaid against their will a year, and probably 18 months, ago.

In 75 per cent of the cases where a man was drafted the people in his family suffered materially on account of his absence. Not only did his absence and the fear of his possible death trouble them, but for the want of his service and the scarcity of labor made his absence a critical circumstance in many homes.

Now that he has returned, and after his absence of probably 18 months, he finds himself dropped into a new world. It is a new world to the returned soldier, for, as a wealthy manufacturer of woolen goods in Philadelphia told the writer personally, "Business forms and systems of office practice have changed so much in the past year that a prewar clerk and office expert would be entirely lost in an office now."

This being the case, and it is, according to my observations, every man from overseas must prepare himself to meet the emergency. But to make such an effort it appears impossible, even after he has been thrown upon the world with a soiled uniform and the "bonus" of $60 to buy another suit and to pay his board for a few days until he finds a job.

Tightwads and professional egotists consider our earnest pleadings sheer begging, and say that we are treading upon ground where we have no claim, and consequently it is a delight, my dear sir, to read that you have taken the stand and are willing to help us. The clouds of battle have moved into the past, and the people are left in a prosperous condition. They who did not see the terrific sights and experience its hardships have forgotten that we were participants therein. It being the most horrible and most destructive war in history, it is likewise the most easily forgotten by those of our Nation who did not experience the raging Hun at their own doors. Nevertheless, the wolf in the form of a venomous Hun did plunder and many feminine lives and infants' hearts were crushed in the mire by his unmerciful heel, yet, because it was not done in America our people can not imagine its horror. I feel that we stopped him from entering our country and from leaving poisonous tracks among our people for future destruction, and I do not think we are begging by asking for a little more money to help set us on our feet again.

We are not begging. We are anxious to work, but in most cases the fields in which we labored and were compelled to leave a year ago are filled with other workmen, and we can not perish; we must live. To my personal knowledge the disheartening effect of having been thrown upon the world with only a ragged uniform and a bonus of $60 has made tramps and gamblers of many men. They had to live; they could not perish, and often work was out of the question. I feel fortunate in having a trade and a good position, but upon being discharged from the service I visited four cities with a friend who was looking for a position. He, like myself, had his $60, but after railroad fare and board were paid a week there was little left. We looked in vain for a place for my friend to work. We applied to every advertiser in the papers and were turned down coldly by different answers. One man in Washington said that he "would hire the man but he'd have to pull off them rags." Surely it was his intention to change clothing as soon as he worked enough to pay for another suit, but the merchant positively would not employ him as long as he wore his uniform.

The last I saw of the young man was in Jacksonville, Fla. I was going to my position, but we had not yet found anything for him to do. The salary of any position was not the question. He was willing to work for just enough to buy something to eat, but we couldn't find it, and I left him in the union station in Jacksonville, with 14 cents in his pocket and nowhere to sleep nor anything to eat. The boy knew nothing about gambling. He was not a "crook." I don't believe he had ever stolen a thing in his life, and according to my opinion he was a good, Christian boy. But he just didn't have enough money to last until he found a job.

I don't know what my young friend is doing, and I do not wish to hear from him. I am afraid to hear from him; I could expect nothing more than the greatest disappointment.

You are right Mr. SWOPE, by standing on the soldier's side, and I hope your bill will pass, not for myself alone, but for the thousands of young men who need it, and need it badly.

Yours, very truly,

JOHN G. HOLT,
Ex-United States Marine.

Almost everyone seems to be agreed that something should be done for the soldiers, and whatever it is should be done at once. Whatever is done should affect all of the soldiers and sailors, instead of a small percentage in one particular profession. With that purpose in view I have framed this bill along suggestions from men who were in the service with me, and suggestions contained in thousands of letters I have read from men who were in the service, not only from Kentucky but from States all over the Union. They all seem to be agreed that those who served a year or more should receive for their time the additional compensation of one year's pay.

The bill I have for consideration, H. R. 9093, provides for one year's pay at the rate of $30 per month for all who served as much as a year, and $30 per month for all those who served more than two months and less than one year.

The bill is as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9093) granting additional compensation to the officers and enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps, including nurses (female).

Be it enacted, etc., That all officers and enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps, including nurses (female), serving the United States in the war against Germany between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, who have been honorably discharged from the service, or who may hereafter be honorably discharged, shall be paid $30 per month, and for each major portion thereof, for each month's actual service, not to exceed 12 months, in addition to the regular pay heretofore authorized, including the extra pay for foreign service and the $60 bonus provided by existing law: Provided, That such payment shall not be made to any person who has served two months or less in any branch of the service; Provided further, That the payment herein authorized shall be made in 20-year Government bonds, bearing 4½ per cent interest per annum, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to issue such bonds, to be known as "service bonds."

This bill, to my mind, is the best solution of the matter. It touches all classes of soldiers. If a man wants it as an investment, it is a good investment. If he needs the ready cash it can be converted at par. If he is in debt on a home, implements, machinery, or tools, he can apply it on the debt. Or, if he wants to renew his schooling, it will be a great help to him. It will bridge the gap between the dull, uneventful days after discharge and remunerative employment. It was also designed to overcome the objections offered by some Members on account of the cost involved. To carry out the provisions of this bill will cost approximately $1,200,000,000. By making it payable in bonds an appropriation is not necessary. I have heard it said that it will cause an inflation. Certainly a bond issue only about one-twenty-fourth the size of the amount of our bonds already issued will not greatly disturb the financial situation.

Having considered the facts upon which this bill was conceived, the method of applying it, and the approximate cost, let us now consider the justification of such a bill.

In the first place we owe this to these men as a matter of fairness. The books of account as between those who stayed at home in the Government employ and those who went into the military service are out of balance. In all of the different departments and bureaus the Government has paid the minimum of about a hundred dollars per month upon the services of the employees in such various departments. Moreover, all that time the slackers and profiteers were becoming rich, and the cab drivers, the hod carriers, the ditch diggers, the section hands, and all other kinds of unskilled labor were making three and four times as much every day as the American soldiers who worked, fought, bled, and died wherever duty called or Old Glory waved. A man can afford to die for his country, if necessary, but he can not give up a year or more of his time and return penniless with the handicap of lost time and expect to successfully compete in the industrial and social life with those who stayed at home on full pay and accumulated profits and reserves in his absence.

During the period covered by the war we have seen legislation for better wages and strikes for better wages, but the faithful old American soldier never struck for better wages—he struck for victory and at the throat of the Hun. And is loyalty now to be rewarded by no more than vain mockery and a paltry $60 bonus, or was he simply promised the bread only to be refused the crumbs?

It is no defense to say that these men fared as well, or better, than the heroes of former wars. In proportion to our national wealth then as compared to our national wealth now the heroes of the former wars were better paid than our soldiers of to-day. In addition to this must be considered the fact that we are to-day living in a faster age than we were in the days of our former wars. Those days were the days of woodcraft, and things progressed slowly. To-day we are moving by leaps and bounds, and a man who is highly efficient to-day may be out of date to-morrow. The men who were drafted in 1917 and 1918 returned after their discharge to find almost a new commercial world. To use the words of a prominent Philadelphia manufacturer of woolen goods, "Business forms and systems of office practice have changed so much in the past year that a prewar clerk and office expert would be entirely lost in an office now." This being the case, every discharged soldier must prepare himself to meet just such an emergency, but is it possible for him to do so with a uniform and a $60 bonus?

The very same condition prevails with respect to young physicians, lawyers, and other professional men who gave up their practice, sold out their libraries and equipment, and returned home penniless, without equipment, rusty in their professions, and their practice gone. What they need and want in such cases is not endowment for life, but sufficient funds to help tide them over to a position where they can regain a livelihood. There are hundreds of thousands of such cases, and with your indulgence I will read a few letters from a professional man, who very ably portrays the conditions under which thousands of his comrades are handicapped:

45 GREENFIELD STREET,
Hartford, Conn., September 3, 1919.

Hon. KING SWOPE,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: Having recently read many accounts of your activity in behalf of ex-service men, notably in preparing a bill to introduce in Congress for an additional bonus, I, an ex-service man, take this opportunity of thanking you for your efforts and in expressing my approval of the wisdom of this legislation.

In reading of the arguments advanced by Congressmen and Senators against this bill I wish to cite to you my case, which I believe is typical of many other men. I enlisted in the United States Marine Corps, as I was a deferred class in the draft, being a married man. It was necessary for me to give up completely a law practice which I had been five years in establishing. My wife worked to support herself, and we were both glad to make these sacrifices. However, upon my discharge I found myself in a peculiar position. It was impossible for me to attempt to reestablish my business without money; therefore it became necessary for me to give up my profession and obtain a position, which I will have to work at until I have saved enough to resume my practice. Incidentally, my wife has been obliged to retain her position. I simply cite my case to show that there are cases where farm allotments, dependency provisions, and such other measures of relief are of absolutely no value. As I stated before, I believe there are thousands of cases like mine, where a substantial bonus given by the Government would be of inestimable good to the ex-soldier. I believe every ex-soldier feels the way I do—that is, in brief, that if the Government was unable to do anything financially for us we could all be perfectly satisfied, but since the Government is apparently in a position to do something, I can not conceive of anything of greater help to the average ex-soldier than a bonus as proposed by you, and I believe it would be appreciated more than any other provision in his behalf. At any rate, I fail to see where any injustice would be done by voting a substantial bonus, and if, as I understand, Canada has given a $600 bonus, the bonus given by the Government of this country is exceedingly small by comparison. In the final analysis of the situation it must be admitted that the soldier who returns to civilian life to face conditions of living as they now are, almost prohibitive, as, for instance, the price of clothing, which is a large item to the ex-soldier, and in all probability a more or less extended period of idleness, there would be nothing so welcome as a cash bonus.

In concluding I will state that if the Congressmen and Senators who are not in favor of this bonus could see the interest taken in its passage by ex-soldiers they would undoubtedly change their attitude.

Again thanking you for the interest you have manifested in this matter, and trusting you will consider my communication as personal, at least to the extent of name and address, I beg to remain,

Respectfully, yours,

WALTER F. FOLEY.

There were thousands and thousands of young men who had bought homes, farms, implements, tools, and machinery and had made only their first payments and were compelled to sacrifice them or increase the mortgage. These were men with families. A good many Members seem to be under the impression that only a few men who had families were drafted. From April to August of 1918 fully half of the men inducted were men with families. I know of two drafts in particular that I helped receive. One was from New York in May and another from Alabama in August. About half of those men from the latter State had families and owned little farms and were drafted just in the midst of their crops. Their wives could not carry or harvest the crops. Neither could they live on the war-risk allotments, and as a result there was a great epidemic of desertion and "absent without leave." Whenever we would inquire of a man why he left he would simply state that his family could not run the farm and that the war-risk allotments were unpaid, and upon investigation it would usually be as he had stated. I have a letter from a soldier in my own district, who requests that his name be withheld, that illustrates those facts very clearly. This is a letter from Nicholasville, Ky., bearing date of September 7, 1919:

NICHOLASVILLE, KY., September 7, 1919.

Hon. KING SWOPE,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Having seen in the paper that you were elected from the eighth district, of which I am proud for several reasons, first, because you are, as I can read and hear, the man that is worthy of your office, and for another reason, you have been a soldier, if I am not mistaken, and by that I am confident that you will do all within your power for the welfare of the ex-soldiers. I have been a soldier and saw service in England and France. I have felt benefited in every way by being a soldier except financially. To sum the thing up, a $60 bonus is not a start at getting back to civil life, as the horrors of war caused our people to suffer and spend everything that they were getting from the Government. However, if I never get a penny for my time passed in service, I will not kick, because I feel that I am a loyal citizen, and if I had the same thing to go through again, I would do it without hesitation. I think if a man is not man enough to fight for his country, he is not worthy of living therein. But, still, while the man has sacrificed himself for the betterment of the country, the country ought to sacrifice something worth while for the betterment of the individual.

Here is the problem that was before me: I was getting in debt for a small home, of which I am still in debt for, and also belong to an order and have insurance, and to get any benefit of them the indebtedness had to be kept within the benefits. In putting my all in the war, I sold my clothing and all that was in my possession in order to obtain money enough for my family to live on until the Government could get their allotment fixed, and that was five months and two days to the day from the time I left home before my wife and kid received their little sum, of which they owed nearly all for their living expenses.

If your effort to get the money for the ex-soldiers fails, I wish I knew how we will meet the problems of life that come before us. I hope in your struggle for more money for soldiers you will demonstrate from this letter in your talks. This is the condition of 1,000,000 or more.

A KENTUCKIAN.

That, gentlemen, is the condition and attitude of hundreds of thousands of American soldiers all over our country. They are not kicking and complaining aloud, but they are confidently expecting and waiting for Congress to come to their rescue. As they all say, they would gladly have made the sacrifice for nothing, but since the Government is able to show its appreciation in a substantial manner it should do something worth while for them. And now it is up to Congress whether it will be less magnanimous than those who gave freely to win the war declared by Congress.

We owe this to these men as a matter of national honor. Let it not be said of this Congress that we were so blinded to our duty, so indifferent or so unmindful of those who saved our country. The whole well-being and security of a nation rests upon the loyalty and readiness of its soldiers. Can we expect them to be enthusiastic and ready if we permit their sacrifices, time, and suffering to go unrewarded? I have heard some talk of introducing a bill for an appropriation to build an arch of triumph in honor of the great victory. I am unalterably opposed to putting one cent into stone until we have put some compensation into the empty pockets of the men who won the victory. Then we can erect all the monuments we care to. The loftiest and most enduring monument we can erect in honor of this war will be our manifested acts of substantial appreciation to the men who won it.

There are some, perhaps, who oppose this measure because it will cost something, yet they will admit that we are in debt to the soldiers. To them I will say that no Government should ever be afraid to pay its honest debt to the soldiers who defend it. As long as we are able to loan so much to our neighbors across the Atlantic, we are able to deal with our soldiers as liberally as any other nation on the globe. It should be our pride to say, "We put the boys back in as good shape as we found them."

Up to December 31, 1918, we had loaned $252,895,000 to Belgium, $7,000,000 to the Czecho-Slovaks, $15,000,000 to Cuba, $2,436,427,000 to France, $4,175,981,000 to Great Britain, $1,310,000,000 to Italy, $39,554,036 to Greece, $5,000,000 to Liberia, $6,665,666 to Roumania, $325,000,000 to Russia, $12,000,000 to Serbia, making a total of $8,585,523,702. That sum is almost four times enough to pay our boys for their time at something like its commercial value. In lending all of this money to our Allies it was simply charity. We will be fortunate if we ever collect the interest on the debt. In other words, we have given to our neighbors four times the amount we hesitate to pay to our own soldiers.

In the second place, about 25,000,000 people subscribed to the fourth Liberty loan and about 20,000,000 subscribed to the fifth Liberty loan. The American people have taken over about $24,000,000,000 in war savings stamps and Liberty and Victory bonds. Not any one of these bondholders feels that he has given his money to the Government. The bonds pay good interest, are good investments, and are the best securities in the world. These $24,000,000,000 of securities that the American people hold against the Government are simply evidence that our Government pays well for everything it requires. It shows that the Government pays good interest for the use of the money it borrowed but pays a low wage for the time of the soldiers that it demanded. Suppose that the tables had been turned around completely and that the Government had paid the soldiers the real commercial value of their time but had said to the purchasers of Liberty bonds, "I can not pay you any interest on these bonds, but will pay you the face value of the bonds some time after the war is over." Do you think that many bond issues would have gone over the top? That is exactly an analogous case. If the Government had not paid interest on these war bonds, it could have afforded at the time to pay the soldiers for their time at something like its commercial value.

Now, the question is, Are we going to be more generous to those who loaned their money than we are to those who loaned their time, their energy, and their all? We must not lose sight of the fact that these young men, with their spirit and dash at Chateau-Thierry, the Marne, and in the Forest of the Argonne, broke the line of the enemy's resistance at least one whole year ahead of all calculations, brought the war to a speedy close, and saved the Government at least $10,000,000,000 of appropriations that would otherwise have been necessary during the current fiscal year, to say nothing of the billions probably saved by terminating the war one year ahead of the earliest expectations. As a matter of fairness the soldiers are entitled to this extra compensation, as a business proposition they have already earned it, and as a Nation we owe it to them.

I served in the Army almost two years myself and what I say is not the product of enthusiasm or imagination but of good, sound experience and personal observation. Those who were not in the service can not conceive of what the men had to endure. It is unnecessary for me to attempt at this time to delineate their troubles and sufferings—words fail to express them. On the other side they faced every destructive device conceived by the ingenious mind of the Hun. On this side last fall, without weapons, without sufficient hospital equipment, and oftentimes neglected, they faced the most deadly of enemies—the Spanish influenza—which claimed more lives in two months than were killed by the Germans during our whole engagement in the war. God forbid that in our hour of victory we should ever forget the days of darkness and sorrow that were necessary before the light of a great peace and victory dawned upon this earth. God forbid that we should be niggardly toward the men who served our country or that our gratitude should be measured by 60 meager dollars, a pompous parade, and a vote of thanks.

I ask you in conclusion to place your ear to the heartbeat of the soldier; see his side of the question and do this Congress the honor of rewarding those men. By so doing we shall have adopted a principle that will defy the touch of time, because those men and their deeds will be loved and cherished as long as patriotism has a home in the human breast. It was an Army from the mingled blood of the North and South; enriched by the glory and horrors of the past, it blossomed into the flower of hope—the great American Army—the grandest array of honor, courage, and patriotism whose blood ever stained the sands of time.

"Not Ten But Twelve."

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. H. GARLAND DUPRÉ, OF LOUISIANA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, November 7, 1919.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Speaker, under leave to print granted me to-day I insert in the RECORD an article from Science, which is a weekly publication issued by the American Association for the Advancement of Science, issue of September 12, 1919, entitled "Not ten but twelve," by Dr. William Benjamin Smith, professor of mathematics in the Tulane University of Louisiana, which deals with our coinage system, reforms therein and in the coinage systems of other nations, and with matters cognate thereto.

NOT TEN BUT TWELVE.

There has come to my hands a petition in the form of an open "letter to Lord Balfour" ("chairman on weights, measures, coinage, etc."), circulated in the name of the "World Trade Club," and calling upon "United States American President, His Excellency Woodrow Wilson, United States American Congress, etc.," and "British Premier, His Excellency David Lloyd-George, Houses of Parliament, etc.," for "legislation, promulgation, orders in council, that will bring about the exclusive use of meter-liter-gram by the United States of America" and "the British Isles."

As the matter is of far-reaching scope and prime importance, may I be allowed a word of earnest protest?

The reasons advanced in the 15 pages of argument on disregarding the ill-advised and ill-founded appeal to national prejudice against the alleged Germanic character of our present system (or chaos) amount merely to the oft-repeated affirmation that the metric system, being consistently decimal, is far simpler, more convenient, and time saving than any nondecimal system, since reductions from unit to unit are made merely by shifting the point, as in dollars and cents. That herein lies a certain very considerable convenience is not denied in any quarter and needs no detailed exposition. Also the advantages of world-wide uniformity in weights, measures, and coinage are plain and uncontested. But this latter fact is no reason for the Anglo-Saxon world to pass over to the Latin-German system, rather than for the latter to yield to some far superior system of the former. While conceding all that may be said with any show of reason in favor of a decimal system, we must not forget nor disguise the very grave disadvantages that inhere ineradicably in it, especially in its cumbrous expression of many simple, important, and frequent fractions, as ½, ⅓, ¼, ⅕, ⅙, ⅛, etc. We protest most earnestly against the adoption of the Latin-German system, not because it is not better than our present lack of all system, but because such adoption would postpone perhaps forever the introduction of a far superior system, which is a capital desideratum of our modern civilization and life. The meter-liter-gram is at least in some ways comparatively good, but the good is the enemy of the best, with which only we can rest content, and it would be an infinite blunder to establish and eternize such a defective system as the meter-liter-gram, when it is almost as easy—at least, when it is entirely possible—to introduce and establish once and for all time the best system that the nature of number and of the human mind permits.

This best of numerical systems is not the 10 system (which is recommended only by the fact that man has 10 fingers and 10 toes), but the 12 system, whose virtues are embedded in the nature of number itself. Its notation requires at once the introduction of two new symbols, one for 10, one for 11, which may be made as pretty and simple as you will, but the initials t and e will answer all present purposes. We shall have, then, the ciphers: 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, t, e. Twelve is then to be written 10, and we shall have the next set; 11, 12, 13—19, 1t, 1e, 20—to be read tel-1, tel-2, tel-3, * * * tel-9, tel-10, tel-len, twentel. The reasons for such names are obvious; tel and len are natural simplifications of 12 and 11. Our present forms, such as 16, 17, which read the numbers 16, 17 backwards, are a stumbling-block to beginners, hindering and confusing them to no purpose whatever. Twentel (20) equals, of course, our present 24. Similarly thirtel-one, etc., fortel, fiftel, sixtel (sistel), sentel (for seventel), eightel, ninetel, tentel, lentel, teltel. This last, 100, equal to our present 144, is, of course, the second power of the base 12 (10), and should have some appropriate name, as dipo, or two-po, or whatever may seem best, and similarly the higher powers, as 1,000 (1,728), 10,000 (20,736), etc.

We see here at once the greater power of this system: with four figures it expresses numbers up to 20,735 (e e e e in the twelve-system), more than twice as many as are so expressible at present—an advantage that steadily increases with the numbers, and shows itself clearly in logarithmic and other tables, where, with the same number of figures, the accuracy of expression would be sensibly higher. Thus, a unit in the sixth decimal place now signifies a millionth, in the Tel-system it would mean about a three-millionth. In the billions, the Tel-notation economizes one place.

Among the many advantages shared by this system with no other, the chief is the high factorability of the base 12, divisable exactly by 2, 3, 4, 6, and simply related to 8 and 9. Thence result extremely simple expressions for the principal fractions:

1/4 = .3
1/6 = .2
1/8 = .16
1/9 = .14
one twelfth = .1
1/20 = .06, etc.

The fractions 1/5, 1/7 one tenth, one eleventh (111 . . .) remain interminate series, but for them we have little practical use. With the foregoing compare the current decimal expressions for the fundamental constantly recurring fractions:

1/2 = .5
1/4 = .25
1/6 = .16666 - - -
1/8 = .125
1/9 = .111 . . .

and the great superiority of the tel-system becomes evident.

The multiplication table[1] becomes markedly simplified. No one has any trouble now in multiplying by 5, because of its simple cycle, 5, 0 (as in 5, 10, 15, 20, etc.); 4 has the much longer, more involved cycle, 4, 8, 2, 6, 0 (as in 4, 8, 12, 16, 20, etc.); 6 has the cycle 6, 2, 8, 4, 0 (6, 12, 18, 24, 30); 8, the cycle 8, 6, 4, 2, 0. Compare with these the cycles in the Tel-system: 2 (2, 4, 6, 8, t, 0), 3 (3, 6, 9, 0), 4 (4, 8, 0), 6 (6, 0), 8 (8, 4, 0), 9 (9, 6, 3, 0), and the surpassing simplicity of this system is again apparent. A child will learn this multiplication table with much less effort than the ten-table, and will find the range of its power and the scope of his attainment just 44 per cent greater (since 100 in the tel-system = 144 in the ten-system).

The year is divided into 12 months, and no other division is likely within any foreseeable time. Accordingly, in time reckoning the advantages of the tel system are obvious. In this notation the number of days in the year is 265. To each month we should by all means assign the same number of days, 30 as now or twenty-six (26) in the tel system; that is, 260 month-days in all; the remaining 5 should be extramensual, legal holidays, easily and instructively distributable over the year, with a sixth such in leap years. Monthly and annual accounts and rates would be turned into each other by merely moving the point one place to right or left. If one received $100 a month, one would receive $1,000 a year; if the interest rate was 6 (per dipo) per year, it would be 0.6 per month. Similarly the day is already divided into (twice) 12 hours; that is, 20 in the tel system. The circle (or round angle) is now divided into 360 degrees (or 260 in the tel system); this Babylonian division is unfortunate, but may be easily conformed to the divisions of the clock face into 12 parts, each of these divided into 12 (stretches of 5 minutes or of 2½ degrees), each of these into 12 again, and so on. With our established time divisions the ten system can never be harmonized.

The better unit of coinage is the American quarter, the English shilling (German mark). The dollar is too large, a fact in some measure responsible for the sinful and ruinous extravagance of American life. The shilling is already divided into 12 pence, a division that admits of no improvement; it remains only to be consistent and to coin the 12-shilling piece (a convenient coin, which might be named the twilling or tel-quar); with its fractions and multiples, which Anglo-American commerce would spread all over the earth. So, too, the foot is already divided into 12 inches. To convert inches and feet into each other it would be necessary only to move the point.

The meter has no superiority over the yard. If the latter be taken as standard, it should be divided into twelfths (or telths), and these again into twelfths, etc. The mile might be slightly reduced to 1,728 yards (in the tel system 1,000 yards, 3,000 feet). All such details and all proper preliminaries to the passage from 10 to 12 could be worked out by scientific committees appointed for the purpose once the number 12 is laid at the base of our numeration, notation, and all forms of measurement, a position for which it is uniquely fitted.

One, and only one, objection can be made to this proposal, namely, that it is impractical, infeasible, and visionary. We dare not answer with the favorite Scripture, "Where there is no vision, the people perish," for this sentiment, alas! is foreign to the Hebrew proverb. But the objectors themselves reject with scorn the similar objection to the introduction of the metric system, that it is impractical and visionary and could only with great difficulty be effected. It is the stock objection of all conservatism, the objection that confronts every effort to rationalize, humanize, beautify, glorify, and justify our life on earth—the objection that it can not be done. The same has been said of a hundred proposals, all declared unrealizable, and all now actually realized. It may be hard to answer Zeno's arguments against the possibility of motion, but it is none the less easy to move. So it will be with the change from 10 to 12. Attempted, it will be accomplished. Not in a day or a year, but at most in a generation. Let the children be taught the tel system year after year. The time necessary to learn it will be quite inconsiderable. Once learned, it will also be loved. In the meantime scientific commissions can go over the whole ground carefully and prepare the way in the wilderness and level up in the desert a road for the age to come. When the change is finally carried into effect, the jar of switching off the 10 track to the 12 track will be much less severe than we now imagine. But it will bring incalculable blessings to all future generations. The great giant arithmetic will be shorn of half his terrors.

It is very common in these loud-mouthed days to make Brobdingnagian pretensions. We are told that each of a score of trifles (baseball among them) won the war, when each made only a paltry contribution to the collective result. So we are assured that each of many things would have abridged the war by months or years. The World Trade Club informs us that had Congress adopted the "meter-liter-gram legislation before Congress (1904), the war would have been shortened two years." If a few other such things had been done, perhaps the war would have been stopped, like Buck Fanshaw's riot, before it was started or even imagined! As such indebtedness heaps up on all sides, one is reminded of the famous couplet:

"Owen More has run away,
Owin' more than he can pay."

We are further assured that, as Clyde Wolfe, master mathematician, University of California, writes, "a conservative estimate is that the exclusive use of meter-litergram would shorten the time of teaching arithmetic to the average child by two years."

If so, then the substitution of 12 for 10 as a base ought to shorten it by at least four years. No such claim is made here, but it is affirmed that a very large and sorely needed saving of time and energy would be effected, and that if the introduction of the thoroughly rational twelve system should be supplemented by the adoption of a thoroughly rational alphabet, with one-to-one correspondence of sign and sound, then would the words of the English language indeed be winged and fly over all the earth; then would our Anglo-American civilization lead the van of progress, and its commerce would fulfill the boast of its poet:

"Trade is the golden girdle of the globe."

Anniversary of the Armistice.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
TOM CONNALLY,
OF TEXAS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

November 11, 1919.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, one year ago to-day at 11 o'clock a. m. the cannon ceased to boom and belch in the greatest war of which the historian has given any account—a year ago to-day the lines of armed men ceased the "bloody business of battle" and rested where they stood—a year ago to-day our victorious Army completed the heroic task for which it went to Europe and brought peace with victory to American arms.

November 11, 1918, will mark a brilliant era in the history not only of the United States but in the chronicles of all time, as long as scholars study the struggles of the past or men in contemplation reflect upon the achievements of men and races in days other than their own.

As representatives of the people in whose name the marvelous accomplishments of our Army were wrought, I deem it not inappropriate that we should to-day pause a moment to note somewhat the progress of the military operations which resulted in such decisive victory and brought imperishable glory to the American soldier on foreign fields. In March and April of the present year I was privileged to be a member of a party of Representatives who visited France, Germany, and Belgium.

One of our objects was to visit the battle fields upon which American troops had written such glowing chapters in the world's history. We knew that America's admiration would always be directed to these historic spots. We knew that America's affections would ever attach to those of her sons whose chivalric conduct had made them illustrious; and we knew that for those soldiers who had laid down their lives upon the red soil of France, America and all of her citizens would pour out their tears and their love in acknowledgment of the great debt which the United States and its people will ever owe to their memory.

It shall be my purpose to briefly review the operations and engagements in which the American Army participated, in chronological order, but neither in such detail nor in that technical fashion possible only to one much more gifted than myself.

Upon arriving in France American divisions were intensively trained in camps and in the trenches with allied organizations before they were actively employed in the line. During this period in the trenches some elements of various divisions took part in local combats and trench raids, but not as units of the American Army. Among the first, if not the first and most important, was that in which troops from the Twenty-sixth Division—the New England division—at Seicheprey, in the Toul sector, came into conflict with enemy raiding parties on April 20, 1918.

BATTLE FIELDS.

CANTIGNY.

On March 21, 1918, began the German offensive in Picardy, which eventuated in the enemy lines being driven almost to Amiens on the west and to Montdidier in the thrust toward Paris. We can not soon forget the days of anxiety in which we feared that the fortunes of war would go decisively against the Allies before our troops could reach the front. We can not efface the memory of the days during which we scanned the headlines and bulletin boards with fear and dread that we might learn that all was lost. The enemy's effort in this sector was at its very peak. The Allies must act and act effectively or the cause would quickly fail. At this time there were in France only four American divisions whose training and equipment, in the opinion of the commanding general, warranted their employment in offensive warfare. On March 28 Gen. Pershing placed at the disposal of Marshal Foch all our troops. On April 26, 1918, the First Division went into the line in the Montdidier sector on the Picardy front. On May 28, 1918, a brigade of the First Division, commanded by then Brig. Gen. but later Maj. Gen. Beaumont B. Buck, attacked Cantigny, a strong German position, and captured that village, holding it against repeated counter attacks. This was the first battle in which an American Army organization as large as a brigade had participated. Prior to that time American forces had been brigaded with the British and with the French. In this operation for the first time there was demonstrated the fact that American troops fighting under the direction of their own officers were capable of overwhelming the choicest shock troops of Germany. Those of us who come from Texas are proud of the fact that in this first major action of the war our victorious troops were led by a Texan and that it was under his direction that the American Army set an example of valorous conduct where all the world might look and see that at last there had arrived upon the battle field the doughty warriors who were able to bring the issues that had wavered for four years to successful decision. This action, brilliantly conceived and more brilliantly executed, proved the superb fighting qualities of our troops under the most trying conditions, and gave final denial to the boasted invincibility of the enemy. It was the prophetic forerunner of what transpired in the various actions around Chateau-Thierry a month later.

BELLEAU WOOD—CHATEAU-THIERRY.

From Paris we proceeded 45 miles in a northeasterly direction until we reached Belleau Wood near the Marne River. You will recall that late in May, 1918—May 27—the German high command, in a last desperate effort to drive a wedge into the Allies' lines and to throw his forces across the Marne River and envelop Paris, launched his great offensive between Soissons and Rheims. It was here that German forces, by the weight of numbers, were enabled to drive a salient that reached to the Marne and which threatened the French capital. Like an inundating flood the tide of invasion swept on. The gravest consequences threatened the Allies. The enemy advance was halted by the French and Americans along a line about 13 kilometers west of the road running south from Soissons to Chateau-Thierry on June 4, 1918. The Second Division in these operations took Bouresches and held it in the face of strong resistance. The Third Division was quickly sent from the south to the Marne. Its machine-gun battalion in advance of the other units reached the bridge at Chateau-Thierry and held it June 1 to 4 and prevented the crossing of the Marne at that point. The Third Division remained in its position south of the Marne, holding a line east of Chateau-Thierry from Chierry to a point 1½ kilometers east of Mezy until its advance on July 18. During this time a number of raiding parties were sent across the river.

At Belleau Wood on June 25, 1918, the Second Division met the German Army and not only stayed its advance but with determined attack threw it into confusion and transformed seeming disaster into definite victory. Two regiments of marines and two regiments of doughboys—the Ninth and Twenty-third Infantries—performed a feat that thrilled the Allies and dazed the enemy.

Belleau Wood is situated a few kilometers to the northwest of the town of Chateau-Thierry. It is wooded and hilly. As we walked over its slopes, evidence of war's toll of life and wealth met our gaze. Here lay a broken rifle; just over there could be seen a battered helmet; here a discarded cartridge belt; a little farther along a twisted machine-gun barrel, and over there a piece of high-explosive shell, while above our heads the trunks and limbs of trees were torn by the flying missiles of death. Here and there along the hillside could be seen German boots still housing portions of human feet. We came upon little cemeteries where were buried the Americans who had fallen in action. Above each little mound was an American cross, indicating the name of the soldier, his organization, and his serial number. American soldiers were then engaged in disinterring bodies buried in scattered graves and bringing them together in a central cemetery where they will repose until either returned to the United States at the request of their relatives or be permanently interred in American National cemeteries in France, whose soil they sanctified by their heroic death. A little farther along we came upon another cemetery. Here were buried the enemy dead. Here lay some of the finest troops of the Empire asleep forever unwept and unhonored by the cruel masters of Germany who sent them to their death.

Following the action at Belleau Wood two battalions of the Ninth and Twenty-third Infantry captured the near-by village of Vaux and the Bois de la Roche and 500 prisoners on July 1. As we stood in this wrecked village we viewed the devastation that had been wrought by the harsh necessities of war. Its population, scattered like chaff before the German storm, was creeping back now that the thunders of war had ceased, to find nothing but the battered stone that once had been their homes. The Twenty-sixth Division relieved the Second about July 10, just northwest of Chateau-Thierry.

Just to the east of Chateau-Thierry the German army in its offensive of July 15, 16, and 17 undertook to throw its forces across the Marne to the southern bank. This attack was made with concentrated artillery support and the Third Division suffered heavy losses. It held its ground stubbornly but was forced to drop back slightly on account of the withdrawal of the French on the right. Here it was that a regiment of the Third Division, in the language of Gen. Pershing, "wrote one of the most brilliant pages in our military annals." Attacked on the front and on both flanks by the enemy who had crossed to the south bank, the colonel commanding the regiment, Col. McAlexander, later Brig. Gen. McAlexander, of the Ninetieth Division, so disposed his forces as not only to successfully resist the German attacks but to make successful counter-attacks and throw back two German divisions and take 600 prisoners.

It was my privilege to hear from the lips of officers of this regiment incidents of this action. The French army operating in this sector had been so decimated by losses and so demoralized by constant attacks of the enemy from the beginning of the offensive, that its morale had been shattered and its powers of resistance greatly weakened. From information gathered from both private and official sources, it is clear that French troops were in flight, exclaiming as they retreated, "The war is over! It is no use to fight further! The enemy can not be stopped!" Amidst the despairing French there still remained one stout heart. An officer of the French inquired of an American officer, "Sir, shall we fall back on your positions or shall we die where we are?" As a reply to this heroic and yet melancholy observation, the American officer ordered the French in reserve. When the action had been concluded, though the ranks of the Americans were thinned by losses, every uncaptured German that still lived was north of the Marne.

A portion of the Forty-second Division (Rainbow) operated with the French east of Rheims in meeting the German offensive of July 15, 16, and 17, and rendered creditable service in holding its ground. On the right flank of the American lines in resisting this offensive the Twenty-eighth Division (Pennsylvania) performed effective work.

SOISSONS—CHATEAU-THIERRY—RHEIMS—AMERICAN OFFENSIVE OF JULY 18–AUGUST 15, 1918.

Marshal Foch, through his intelligence service, had learned that the enemy, in order to have as many troops as possible for use in the offensive of July 15 near Chateau-Thierry, had weakened his line from the Aisne to Chateau-Thierry. He had also learned that the enemy attack east of Chateau-Thierry had been planned for July 15. It was then decided to leave south of the Marne only sufficient troops to hold the enemy and to concentrate French and American divisions between Soissons and Chateau-Thierry. It was planned that as soon as the engagement should begin on the Marne an attack should begin between Soissons and Chateau-Thierry, in an effort to cut the lines of communication and force an enemy withdrawal. This operation is known as the allied offensive of July 18, 1918. At 4.45 a. m., July 18, 1918, without any artillery preparation, the First and Second Divisions, with French divisions, attacked the German lines in the vicinity of and south of Soissons. At the notable battle at Berzy le Sec the First Division won a signal triumph and captured this point of vantage. The Second Division and the Twenty-sixth Division continued the attack between Soissons and Chateau-Thierry, and at the same time the Third Division, just east of Chateau-Thierry, crossed the Marne and drove the enemy before it. The Forty-second, Thirty-second, Fourth, Seventy-seventh, and Twenty-eighth Divisions took part in the fighting at various points in the combined drive in this sector between July 24 and September 9, which threw the Germans back to the Vesle River and attained the objectives of the allied offensive of July 18 following the halting of the enemy at the Marne. These attacks on the salient succeeded in crumpling the German defenses and presented the enemy with the dilemma either to be cut off and captured in the pocket near Chateau-Thierry or to hastily withdraw his lines in retreat. By July 20 the enemy began to withdraw. The actions in the vicinity of Chateau-Thierry, in point of numbers engaged, did not compare with some other battles in which the armies participated, yet in the results attained they stand out prominently in the war's history. It was demonstrated that American troops, though not habituated by actual experience in modern warfare, were able to meet successfully European troops seasoned and hardened by four years of triumphant struggle. The weakened and staggering lines of the Allies, by the example of American hardihood and American bravery, were encouraged to rally to a final and successful drive against the foe. Henceforward the fortunes of war never were in doubt. On all fronts the enemy was pushed back upon his defenses and finally to his abject and humiliating surrender.

ST. MIHIEL.

To the south of Verdun the former battle line ran in a southern direction from Verdun to St. Mihiel and thence in an eastern direction toward the hostile fortress of Metz. The two lines of battle converged at St. Mihiel and were known as the St. Mihiel salient. In its reduction the American Army, operating in its own sector, launched its first large-scale offensive. The enemy had occupied these lines since shortly after the beginning of the war. The point of the salient rested on the Meuse River, and the positions were strongly fortified by trenches, barbed-wire entanglements, dugouts, and concrete pill boxes, from which were operated machine guns and artillery. Against the defenses the French had at various times made determined attacks, being uniformly unsuccessful and sustaining enormous losses. It was the American plan to attack on each flank of the salient simultaneously, and in the execution of this plan more than 450,000 American soldiers were employed. Our troops, consisting of the Ninetieth Division of Texas and Oklahoma troops, and the Eighty-second, Fifth, Second, Eighty-ninth, Forty-second, First, and Fourth Divisions, with the Third, Seventy-eighth, Thirty-fifth, and Ninety-first Divisions, with the right flank of the line resting on the Moselle River, made an attack on the lines east of St. Mihiel on September 12, 1918. At the same time the Twenty-sixth Division, in conjunction with French troops, attacked to the northwest of St. Mihiel. The result of these operations had by September 15 brought about the collapse of the defenses in the entire area and forced an enemy withdrawal in the direction of Metz. Our losses were comparatively small. This was due to the consummate skill with which the operation was planned and to the remarkable efficiency with which every detail was executed.

Following St. Mihiel many of our divisions were quickly thrown into the Meuse-Argonne offensive.

MEUSE-ARGONNE.

From a point north of Verdun near the Meuse River this battle field stretches westward to a point just west of Varennes and northward to the Meuse River as far west as Sedan. In order to understand the character and nature of this engagement, attention must be paid to the tremendous strategic importance of the territory on which it was fought. The Argonne Forest is a series of wooded hills, separated by ravines and valleys. For four years the Germans had been in possession of this territory, and its value lay in the fact that it constituted a hinge of the German defensive system from Verdun on the south northward to Belgium. It shielded and protected a line of railways passing through Sedan and paralleling the enemy lines, by the aid of which the German high command was able to quickly transport large numbers of troops to whatever section of the line might require reinforcement in event of allied attacks. By reason of the facility with which troops could be switched from one section of the western front to another, the enemy could at his pleasure bring to bear great pressure on the weak points in the allied lines, or, in turn, could strongly reenforce and protect the weak points in his own lines.

The Argonne Forest was by nature strongly fortified. Any layman recognizes that hilly ground is easily defended. Wooded territory similarly affords protection of great value to armies in the field. Added to these natural defenses, the Germans during their period of occupation had woven across the slopes and crests of the hills and throughout the forest a web of entrenchments and dugouts that were almost impregnable. Just to the north, beyond the high points, the hillsides had been turned into underground barracks by the construction of dugouts in such numbers and of a character capable of housing an enormous force. All of the arts of defensive warfare had been employed to render secure the lodgment in this forest of the German forces. Line after line of trenches were protected by numerous lines of barbed wire entanglements, woven and twisted together in inextricable masses so as seemingly to render it impossible for infantry to advance against them. Our party visited the dugout of Crown Prince Rupprecht of Bavaria. Headquarters of this commander had been maintained in the Argonne Forest for a long period of time. He was protected in a spacious and handsome dugout on the slope of a ridge where allied artillery could not imperil his safety. All care had been exercised in providing for his luxury and comfort. The walls and ceiling were not bare of the decorator's art. A bathroom was provided. Telephones and electric lights brought the conveniences of modern life to this military chieftain.

Prior to the Meuse-Argonne offensive, the commanding general of the American Expeditionary Forces had realized a desire which he had entertained since first arriving in France, to put in the field an American army, operating as an American army, and officered and directed by American generals. Such an army had been organized and operated in the St. Mihiel drive on September 12 to 15, and Marshal Foch and Gen. Pershing now planned to employ this American Army in the Meuse-Argonne offensive. It was believed if the enemy could be thrown out of the Argonne Forest and driven across the Meuse River, that a withdrawal of the German lines from this point to the North Sea would inevitably result. It seemed to our strategists that it must necessarily follow that the railway lines protected by the Argonne and the Meuse River could no longer be regarded as tenable by the German forces and could no longer be employed as avenues through which troops could be quickly poured from one section of the battle front to another.

When it is remembered that in point of numbers more American troops were engaged in the Meuse-Argonne offensive than were ever led into battle in a single engagement in all the history of this Republic, when it is remembered that this one engagement was of such transcendent importance as to bring about the retreat of the German forces not only in the American sector but in the sectors held by the French, British, and the Belgians, and directly contributed to the collapse of the German armies in the field, a proper conception of the tremendous significance of this battle can be realized. In this engagement there were employed 896,000 American soldiers. As we walked over the territory covered by the Meuse-Argonne offensive we could see that the war god had driven his chariot along this way. The implements and enginery of war lay abandoned and scattered about. The earth was pitted by shells and craters, and the forest was burned and blackened by the smoke of battle. Of the eight hundred thousand and more that were engaged, we suffered losses of nearly 125,000 men killed, wounded, prisoners, and missing.

In this action our losses were almost half as many as our total losses in the war. The battle field extended beyond the Argonne forest proper out into plains to the northward and eastward and thence on across the hills to the Meuse River. To the traveler who now visits the scenes of this great battle and looks upon the defenses constructed both by nature and by the modern military engineer, it seems inconceivable that an army once ensconced in these defenses could be driven from its shelter through these wooded hills, out of such trenches and dugouts, and sent in headlong flight. American soldiers charged up those hillsides, through the woods, on through the ravines and scattered and drove into rout and confusion the hostile hordes. The topography of this territory afforded admirable opportunity for the employment of machine guns by the enemy, and it was necessary for the American troops repeatedly to take machine-gun emplacements and machine-gun nests by direct infantry attack as well as to withstand artillery and infantry resistance.

The Meuse-Argonne offensive began on September 26 and continued until November 11, 1918. Ten divisions, first attacking, advanced 10 miles in depth in two days. During October Americans were continuously engaged against a total of 33 German divisions.

On October 25 the American line extended east and west a little north of Grand Pre.

On November 1 the final drive, preceded by a carefully prepared artillery bombardment, was begun, and resulted in an advance of 40 kilometers in seven days.

The following divisions were engaged: First, Second, Third, Fourth, Fifth, Twenty-sixth, Twenty-eighth, Twenty-ninth, Thirty-second, Thirty-third, Thirty-fifth, Thirty-seventh, Forty-second, Seventy-seventh, Seventy-eighth, Seventy-ninth, Eightieth, Eighty-first, Eighty-second, Eighty-ninth, Ninetieth, composed of Texas and Oklahoma troops, and the Ninety-first. The Ninety-second was in corps reserve. The Ninetieth Division early on the morning of November 11 crossed the Meuse and captured Stenay. In this offensive the American Army took 16,059 prisoners and 468 guns.

After the German forces had been driven from the Argonne Forest they fell back to various points of vantage toward the east and toward the Meuse River. To drive them from these defensive positions it was necessary for the Americans, after charging through the forest, to emerge on a plain where they were subject to attack by all arms of the enemy's service. Montfaucon was one of the defenses to which the Germans retired. Located on an eminence and sweeping with its fire the plain which intervened between the highlands and the Argonne Forest, its capture was of the utmost importance. Our troops, with courage unsurpassed, advanced and captured not only Montfaucon but all other objectives.

It was at Montfaucon, whose buildings, save one, had been leveled by artillery fire, that we paused to inspect the dugout of the Crown Prince of Prussia. It was here that he had his headquarters during the attacks on Verdun, which were popularly supposed to have been conducted by the Crown Prince. In a large stone structure in the heart of Montfaucon the Crown Prince had caused to be erected a concrete tower leading from a cellar underneath the house to the floors above. Within this concrete tower was located a specially constructed periscope, by which, ensconced in the cellar, 40 feet below the surface of the earth, he was able to watch the progress of his armies as, in 1916, they invested the fortress of Verdun. Safe and secure in his hiding place he threw his German soldiers heedlessly and recklessly against the artillery of the French on the outlying defenses of Verdun. It is estimated that 600,000 Germans bit the dust in these fruitless assaults.

By 11 a. m. on November 11 the enemy line of communication had been cut at Sedan and our troops had advanced until they occupied a line extending from Sedan eastward practically following the Meuse River, partly on the south side and partly on the north side. The enemy had been routed; the war had been won.

CHAMPAGNE SECTOR.

During the progress of the Meuse-Argonne American divisions were gallantly fighting on other portions of the western front. Leaving Rheims we passed along the battle front east of that point through the Champagne area where American divisions were operating with French divisions in the closing days of the war. About October 7 the Thirty-sixth Division, composed of Texas and Oklahoma National Guard, relieved the Second Division on this front. It bravely withstood severe enemy attacks and for many days pursuing drove the enemy across the Aisne.

NORTHERN FRANCE.

Traveling from Paris along the western battle front into Belgium, we visited Compeigne, Amiens, Peronne, Baupaume, Vimy Ridge, Mont Kimmel, St. Quentin, Cambrai, Douai, Arras, Lens, Lille, Ypres, Furnes, and the Yser Canal. A part of this front was held by the Belgians, a portion by the British, and a portion by the French. The Second American Army Corps, consisting of the Twenty-seventh and Thirtieth Divisions, operated on the British sector, and from October 6 to October 19 captured more than 6,000 prisoners. The Thirty-seventh and Ninety-first American Divisions, withdrawn from the Argonne during the operations there, were transferred to Belgium and fought in the section around Ypres, and on October 31, in assaults on that front, overcame all resistance and captured their objectives. On November 3 the Thirty-seventh drove the enemy across the Escaut River, and the Ninety-first reached the Scheldt and the town of Audenarde.

Across the territory which we now traversed armies had reeled, and staggered, and struggled since cannon had first begun to bellow in August, 1914. Back and forth, first here and now there, the wavering and bending lines had been broken, then re-formed, and now and then sweeping forward in dashing and deadly charges, at last thinned and exhausted had settled down in muddy trenches to watch and wait for the enemy. It was here that the British and French were swept along by the swarming gray-coated German Infantry in 1914 and then in turn swung them back from the Marne. It was here that in the spring and summer of 1918 Marshal Haig exhorted the bruised and bleeding British, with their backs to the wall, to fight and die in their tracks.

As we sped over the roadways of northern France the scenes of devastation amazed us. In the vicinity of Lens the ruin that met our gaze was absolutely indescribable. Here, before the war, a city of 30,000 people carried on its industry and commerce. Its streets and avenues pulsed with the throbbing life of a thrifty and prosperous community. Now not a single wall stood. The residences, factories, stores, and banks were a tumbled and tangled mass of crushed and powdered stone and brick. It was silent and untenanted by human beings, except a few British soldiers guarding salvaged war material. On either side of the roadways formerly grew rows of handsome trees. As we rode along I looked for miles that I might see a single tree, either along the roadway or on the plain that yet bore evidence of life; and though once trees dotted the landscape I could not find one that yet had within it the springs of life. Giants of other days, they stood with bare and broken limbs, with torn and shattered trunks, leafless and withered, gaunt specters of their former selves. In the fields and farms no sign of human or vegetable life could be seen save the rank and poisonous weeds that had sprung up since men had ceased to march and fight. Parched and burned by the hot breath of cannon, the very soil of Mother Earth had been so plowed, and upturned, and mingled, and mixed with barren clay and subsoil that it offered little hope of future fertility. No painter's brush can on cold and lifeless canvas adequately portray the utter desolation and wretchedness that stalked abroad in what was once fair France. No facile pen or spoken word can present to your minds vividly that which greets the returning Frenchman as he comes back from the army or the area to which he had fled in refuge to look again for the field which to his toil in the years gone by yielded sustenance and support; at the despair that greets him as he trudges back and scratches among the heaped masses of débris in vain search for his home. He finds the hearth that was his destroyed, his belongings carried away or scattered to the winds.

Lens and its surroundings are typical of many localities in northern France. At Ypres, in Belgium, the scene of several stubborn and bloody engagements, conditions are similar to those around Lens. At one point near there, within a radius of 100 yards, we saw eight wrecked British tanks and were informed that in the immediate neighborhood there were 56. Some had become bogged in the mire and had then been destroyed by shell fire, while others had been disabled in action. It was at this point that some one picked up a human skull. A British officer, noting his curiosity, informed him that if he desired a souvenir of that character, across the road could be found heaps of human bones.

In all this territory, and particularly near Cambrai and Arras, and in fact at many points in the British and American sectors, salvaged war material, rifles, large shells, bayonets, helmets, scabbards, and artillery of various calibers captured or abandoned had been collected in storage dumps. At Furnes, in the southwest corner of Belgium, near the Yser Canal, Albert, the soldier King of the Belgians, had maintained his headquarters, and from this point directed his army. Driven from his capital and his throne, he fought on. He remained with his army, and though sovereign over little of his soil defended it desperately and doggedly when all seemed lost but honor.

LUXEMBOURG.

One of the objects of our travels was to visit the American Army of Occupation, and in pursuance of that purpose we entered Luxembourg at the French border town of Longwy, where the troops of the Crown Prince of Prussia attacked in the first days of the war, capturing the city and occupying it until the last. The value of its possession lay in the great iron and steel works situate there. From this point we followed the great highway along which the gray-coated hordes had poured in their first sweep toward the heart of France until we reached Luxembourg, the capital of the Grand Duchy. Luxembourg is a beautiful and rich agricultural country and was practically untouched by military operations. The farmers were busy with their planting and sowing and the fields gave promise of a bountiful harvest. Entirely surrounded by warring nations, food and other necessities of life became extremely scarce and very dear during the continuance of hostilities, and there was consequent suffering.

COBLENZ.

Proceeding into German territory, we passed through Treves and thence journeyed to Berncastle, where were located the headquarters of the Ninetieth Division, composed of Texas and Oklahoma troops. We saw many officers and men from these States. Journeying over the occupied territory we reached Coblenz on the Rhine, where were situate the headquarters of the American Third Army—the Army of Occupation. At that time American forces in the occupied territory numbered 240,000 officers and men. This force was scattered over the entire American area. The troops were billeted in the villages and towns. Returning to France, we visited the Thirty-sixth Division, Texas and Oklahoma National Guard, which was then stationed in various towns and villages in the vicinity of Tonnere.

CONCLUSION.

Modern warfare, as practiced in the great struggle which has happily come to an end, did not afford the same degree of opportunity as former wars for the development of individual military genius or leadership. Armies containing millions of men stretched out over battle lines hundreds of miles in length and employing the arms of offense and defense developed in recent years do not present the same circumstances for individual dash or strategy as were formerly afforded by small armies in open warfare, where a strategist of unusual ability could quickly throw his whole force upon some weak point of the enemy or by a brilliant maneuver could overwhelm a force many times larger than his own. Modern warfare has become a contest of science, of organization, of supplies, and of careful, cautious planning for offensives with enormous forces over wide fronts. As to our own Army, it may be truly said as to officers and men that its personnel was not equaled by that of any other army, enemy or allied, participating in the war. Superlative praise is due to the great rank and file of the armies that bore the brunt and burden of the fighting. To the subalterns and enlisted men who faced machine guns and charged trenches and dugouts and stood the punishment of artillery bombardment without flinching, who advanced into areas saturated with poisonous gas, and, never halting, never pausing, marched relentlessly into the very face of death and gallantly drove the enemy before them, America can never give too much honor. Their gallantry and courage made possible the marvelous success which attended the operations of our forces.

And to those operations allow me to say that our conclusions were that they had never been surpassed in any of the wars and campaigns that had been waged on European soil. We rode along the highways down which the Roman Emperors poured their legions in subduing Gaul and in their campaigns against fierce barbaric tribes. We traversed the Belgian Provinces which the Spanish Duke of Alva sought to conquer and subdue.

At Coblenz-on-the-Rhine for 2,000 years the armies of Europe have crossed and recrossed. Here Marlborough led his forces on the road to Blenheim.

At Orleans we had recounted the stirring incidents of its deliverance by the peasant maid, the most heroic and pathetic figure of her day, who, guided by the mystic voices that spoke to her in her dreams, leading her enthusiastic troops, drove the English from its gates. At last we stood upon the famous field of Waterloo, where the greatest genius that ever wore a sword struggled desperately but in vain to retain his trembling and loosening hold upon his throne.

But the historian with impartial pen will record that in none of these historic theaters was greater courage displayed or more brilliant dash or greater gallantry than were exhibited by American troops on the hills and slopes, the forests and plains, where they fought and bled and died in the mightiest cataclysm that ever toppled from their thrones the frightened monarchs of a period that is forever past.

As a conclusion to what we had seen and heard in our trip to Europe, we came at last to ponder over and consider the attitude in which our country finds herself as compared with the other warring nations.

Notwithstanding our colossal expenditures, the United States is the one great nation that emerges with her resources not seriously impaired.

Our losses in battle, while large, do not approximate those sustained by Germany, Austria, Great Britain, or France. France has suffered the loss of the flower of her manhood and the destruction of her cities and industries, and whole sections of her territory lie stricken with fire and sword. Great Britain, once the banker of the world, must now come to America as a borrower. In Picardy and Flanders and France she has left hundreds of thousands of her bravest and best fighters; she has accumulated a debt staggering in its proportions. Germany, by the terms of peace, must surrender much of her territory, and will be required to labor for years to discharge the indemnities laid upon her guilty back. Austria, dismembered and weighted down by national obligations, can no longer be counted a great power. America, of them all, can look into the future with the brightest hope and the greatest assurance that in the years to come hers shall be the foremost place along the pathway that leads to greatness.

The war in Europe has ended—but it has left in its wake domestic conditions and problems that challenge our patriotism and wisdom; for their solution we shall need courage and devoted adherence to American ideals.

America is sound at heart—the spirit of the great mass of the American people is true and loyal to the principles upon which this Government was conceived by its founders, to the principles which gave strength to those who won its independence with the sword—the principles of representative government—the principles of constitutional government and ordered society.

This is a land of individual freedom under the law, a land of equal protection of the law to every citizen, a land whose institutions are the institutions of the people, fashioned by themselves through the Constitution or through laws enacted by their representatives. It was to protect this Government and institutions from destruction that our gallant armies fought. Saved from destruction by arms it is our duty to preserve them in peace. From the vexing tasks that now face us may we not shrink. Let us remove the burdensome and irritating restrictions upon the citizen and his enterprises which the necessities of war imposed as quickly as possible.

In view of the enormous war expenses let us exercise and insist upon the most rigid economy in Government expenditures and a high degree of efficiency in each department. The industry and enterprise of our people, the national resources, and obedience to and respect for our form of government and institutions can not fail to secure a future of dazzling national splendor.

When our journeys had been completed, we embarked on the George Washington to return to the United States. As the majestic liner lifted anchor and turned her bow toward the west, we stood on her decks and bade farewell to France; France, the land of history and memories, reddened by 20 centuries of war and turmoil; the land of sorrows and of tragedies; the land from which our gallant boys have brought back to America a new glory. With us on the deck stood American officers and men; a year before they had landed at this port, restless to reach the battle field. Within the year they had come, they had seen, they had conquered. Now that their work had been done, now that the invader had been driven back, now that America's purpose had been accomplished, they were as anxious to return home as they had been anxious to reach France.

Eight days later we again stood on the decks. As we steamed into New York Harbor, every eye was strained to catch the first glimpse of native land. As we looked once more upon our own shores, soldier and civilian alike were conscious of a bigger, broader, and better conception of America than had ever before stirred within their brains or thrilled their secret souls. Here at last was the land of liberty and of opportunity; here again was the beloved country under whose flag these soldiers had gone across; here their kindred and fellow countrymen in whose cause and in whose name they had fought. As they had left these shores in time of war to save a bleeding world, they had now come back to save and serve their country in peace under God's blessings. They came back adoring America more, because they had seen Europe and the Old World. Every soldier as he comes back from foreign lands is richer and better, a stronger and braver American, than before he set sail from his native shores. America's gain shall be not alone that her honor was protected, not alone that the deaths of her citizens on the high seas were revenged, and the insolence and defiance of a brutal and ambitious monarch punished, but hers shall be the still greater and more lasting gain that shall come from the return to civil life and citizenship of the millions of men of the valiant Army that on the fields of Europe vindicated the might and majesty of the Nation which they love; these soldiers will not surrender in peace that for which they offered to die in battle; ours shall be the gain that comes in a stronger fabric of nationality, the fusing and mingling of section and of prejudice into homogeneous American patriotism that shall be willing to give all, surrender all, and do all for our common country in spite of the dangers that may come or the crises that may challenge us in the unfathomed years into which we look.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JAMES A. FREAR,
OF WISCONSIN,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, November 11, 1919.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker, the resolution against seating Victor Berger, Congressman elect from the fifth district of Wisconsin, bases the charge on Mr. Berger's conviction for violation of the espionage act and of his subsequent sentence by the court. In an open letter to Members of this House Mr. Berger says he is a victim of persecution, of indictments laid after he became a candidate for office, and prosecution begun after he was elected to office. He claims improper trial, unjust conviction, and says he was duly elected to Congress on the Socialist platform, and having been elected now demands his seat.

The committee unanimously finds against Mr. Berger's right to a seat in the House.

Under the power contained in section 5, Article I, of the Constitution, which makes each House the judge of the election and qualification of its Members, the committee reports adversely to Mr. Berger, upon his antiwar views, upon his conviction under the espionage law in a case wherein he has appealed to the Supreme Court, and on other counts. Remembering Lincoln's opposition to the Mexican War, the opposition of Greeley, McClellan, and others to the Civil War, and the opposition of eminent men of all generations to war in general, any decision against Mr. Berger, if justified, must be based upon fundamental grounds that outweigh the rights to office of one who has been legally elected. On the other hand, the insistence that a man's qualifications can not be determined in advance is untenable.

I do not minimize the seriousness of a record of conviction, whether merited under the law or not, but Berger has appealed from a lower court's decision, and many cases of appeal have been reversed from espionage-law convictions. I can not base my judgment of the Berger case on any "acid test" of patriotism or loyalty fixed by others, whether wearing ermine or homespun, nor upon the verdict which Mr. Berger claims was rendered by a "Chicago hand-picked jury," before which he was hauled from his home in Wisconsin. He contends his prosecution and conviction were for political reasons, and in his open letter to Members of Congress he intimates that the prosecution and the present opposition to him is because of his affiliation with the Socialist Party, of which he states he was an organizer and now is a conspicuous member.

On this floor I challenged the "acid test" of patriotism offered against Senator LENROOT in the 1918 senatorial election immediately after it was politically promulgated by President Wilson. In like manner, I denounced the National Security League's "acid test" of patriotism lodged against the American Congress and a large part of our citizenship. That charge, initiated by a powerful, hypocritical, Wall Street corporation and circulated by 1,400 papers of the country was shown to be false and the so-called "Security League" is discredited before the country by the facts set out in the report adopted by this House. Senator LENROOT was elected in face of President Wilson's "acid-test" opposition, and a partisan appeal for political control of Congress made under the guise of loyalty by the President was equally unavailing, while one of the "willful twelve" was unanimously elected President pro tempore of the United States Senate. Such "tests" are always repudiated by an intelligent people.

If I believed the protest against seating Mr. Berger is based alone on such grounds or because of his affiliations with the Socialist Party, I would feel compelled to support his claims to a seat on this floor. While I have been a lifelong Republican, I learned long ago that all good or evil is not confined to any one party, and that parties are instrumentalities to an end in securing necessary laws through duly elected officials. Progressive laws in Wisconsin, the home State of Mr. Berger, were made possible over strongly intrenched opposition with the aid of Democrats and Socialist legislators, who helped Republican legislators to secure such laws.

During the war just ended Wisconsin went over the top in men and money at every call, and not one case of riot or lawlessness occurred through any protest against war or conscription in Wisconsin's entire population of approximately 3,000,000 people. The celebrated "Les Terribles" Thirty-second Division, that suffered 14,000 casualties and lost over half of some of its companies and regiments, was largely composed of Wisconsin men, who marched shoulder to shoulder, Republicans, Socialists, and Democrats alike, carrying the same flag across the Vesle River to victory. Berger will not be denied his seat because he is a Socialist, and no fair-minded man will reach that conclusion.

In his open letter of May, 1919, addressed to every Member of this Congress, Mr. Berger says:

"Socialism is the collective ownership of the means of social production and distribution, while Bolshevism is communism combined with syn'icalism. * * * A socialist commonwealth will not do away with the individual ownership of property, but only with the individual ownership of socially necessary capital. * * * Bolshevism is communism and denies the individual ownership of property. * * * While Socialists are not Bolsheviks, if they had only the choice between Bolshevism and plutocracy, they would stand for Bolshevism in preference to plutocracy."

In his open letter to us Mr. Berger continually charges that "capitalism" and "plutocracy" control this Government and its legislation; and on page 12 he prophesies: "The capitalists, by tyrannical legislation and force, may retard socialism, but then they will surely get anarchism. They will invite a cataclysm such as the world has never seen before, a cataclysm in which their class will be simply wiped out in the end." This prophesy he terms a "warning," not a "threat." Again he declares: "Our capitalistic rulers may form a league of nations. It will be nothing but an alliance of more or less plutocratic governments." He predicts, "The communists will eventually win," and so forth.

A paper was found on the person of a deceased anarchist who exploded a bomb on Attorney General Palmer's doorstep in Washington. One paragraph read, "We are ready to do anything and everything to suppress the capitalistic class." This sounds familiar, and as Attorney General Palmer, Mayor Davis, of Cleveland, Justice Hayden, of Boston, a Catholic church in Philadelphia, and other so-called "capitalistic classes" were made targets for anarchists' bombs on the same day, the term "capitalistic class" appears to include all who are not enrolled for violence and bloody revolution. Mr. Berger is an able citizen, not an anarchist, but his fiery utterances and revolutionary views tend to promote a violence he professes to condemn.

Injustice in individual cases will ever result in governments administered by human agencies, but Bolshevism, communism, and anarchy sweep away all safeguards of government, leaving society controlled by brute force. Catharine Breshkovskaya says:

> Bolshevism is a theory of socialism perverted into an appeal for vengeance, robbery, destruction, and immediate murder to anyone resisting.

Andreiev, another Russian writer, says of Bolshevism:

> These savages have revolted against culture, law, and the code of human morals.

And he describes the wanton murder of men, women, and children committed by Bolshevism is brought about under the plea of steps toward improvement in government. Yet Berger apparently prefers Bolshevism to our present Government, which he terms "plutocratic." In a press statement of May 30, this year, the national executive committee of the Socialist Party, at Chicago, suspended 25,000 Socialist members of the "extremist wing." Which wing does Mr. Berger represent when voicing his preference for Bolshevism, or does he speak for Socialists at all when uttering such statements?

In an editorial of June 20, 1917, which he quotes to us with approval, Mr. Berger says:

> Our plutocracy and its Government in Washington is now establishing an absolute autocracy in our country.

With the realization that Russia and other European Governments are being destroyed or undermined by Bolshevist teachings and that disciples of anarchy are found in our own country, every lover of America and the Government under which we live must weigh well the purpose of those who voice the sentiments quoted, or who would wreck our Government and substitute Bolshevism for an imperfect but tested democracy. Though society may be unduly influenced by what Mr. Berger alleges to be "absolute autocracy," neither plutocracy, autocracy, nor Bolshevism will ever find permanent lodgment in America.

Mr. Berger's conception of our governmental conditions and his proposed plan for violent revolution may be measured by his own words, published in his paper some years prior to the war, wherein he is quoted as saying:

> In view of the plutocratic lawmaking of the present day it is easy to predict that the safety and hope of this country will finally lie in one direction—only that of a violent and bloody revolution. Therefore I say each of the 500,000 Socialist voters and of the 2,000,000 workingmen who instinctively incline our way should, besides doing much reading and still more thinking, also have a good rifle and the necessary rounds of ammunition in his home and be prepared to back up his ballot with his bullets, if necessary.

This advice was expressed before the war, but in his open letter to Representatives at the beginning of the Sixty-sixth Congress, Mr. Berger says, page 12:

I have nothing to retract from the articles that I have written or from the speeches I have made.

Berger, the writer and speaker, says in substance to this membership that he prefers Bolshevism to our present form of government; that a change is to be brought about through violent and bloody revolution like that in Russia, and as a preliminary to such revolution he urged 2,000,000 men each to secure a good rifle and the necessary rounds of ammunition and to back up his ballot or views with his bullets. In order to cut the ground completely from under any modification of these views, he says he has nothing in past utterances to retract, and offers himself at the bar of the House prepared to take an oath of office to support and defend the Constitution.

That his inflammatory advice was not followed and that not one case of riot or resistance to law has occurred in the entire State of Wisconsin makes certain neither the Socialists nor the workingmen of the country act on or approve such inflammatory utterances.

I do not intend to comment upon the plain meaning of words. It is incomprehensible how any man can reconcile such views with our form of government or when advocating "bloody revolution" can qualify for membership in this House. Words considered only reckless and extravagant when uttered by a private citizen become far-reaching, inspire and invite violence and bloody revolution when voiced on the floor of this House, where immunity protects the Member. Acceptance by the House of one possessing such un-American views, with his defiant statement that he has nothing to retract, would stultify this membership. Such revolutionary ideas are not approved by the people whom Mr. Berger claims to represent through a minority vote of the fifth district of Wisconsin, nor by the people of his district nor of the State or Nation. I do not underestimate the unrest throughout the world that has overthrown Governments and which, like a prairie fire, is hard to curb, nor do I dispute that plutocracy has fed flames of discontent and unrest, but this plutocracy must be controlled by lawful methods, if civilized government is to endure.

The intelligent surgeon seeks to remove the malignant growth and save the patient. The Bolshevist, anarchist, or I. W. W. applies the surgeon's knife at the throat, and then under the beneficent law of "communism" helps himself to all valuables found on the deceased. That treatment will not find favor in this country, and anyone who practices in the red school of surgery pulls down upon his own head the house that shelters him.

It has been urged that Mr. Berger is being deprived of a high privilege and that his constituency will be unrepresented by his rejection from membership. The action of a constituency in sending a Representative here ought not to be overruled exceepting when the superior rights of the Government which he equally represents are injured or imperiled. That issue is squarely presented to the House by the Berger case.

Mr. Speaker, I might close these brief remarks with quotations from scores of American statesmen on America; with eulogies from Washington, Jefferson, Franklin, and down through the century and a quarter of national growth to men of the present day; with tributes to America's opportunities, possibilities, glorious history, and its destiny among the nations of the world. These would answer the publicly expressed views of Mr. Berger. I forego that temptation but conclude with a few words from a former resident of the same city of Milwaukee whose name is familiar to every student of American history. Sixty years ago he wrote in simple direct language—not of bloody revolution, or of deadly rifles, or bullets, or of Bolshevism, but as a brave American soldier and patriotic statesman. He says:

I was born not far from the beautiful spot where the Rhine rolls its great waters out of the beautiful gate of the Seven Mountains. In early life I saw Germany shake her chains in order to burst them, and I heard a gigantic universal shout of liberty rising to the skies; and at last, having struggled manfully and drenched the earth of the fatherland with the blood of thousands, I saw that nation crushed down again by overwhelming armies, by the dead-weight of customs and institutions and prejudice which past centuries had heaped upon them. Then I turned my eyes instinctively across the Atlantic Ocean and America and Americanism appeared to me as the last depositories of the hopes of all friends of humanity. Born in a foreign land, I pay my tribute to Amercanism, true Americanism, which comprehends the noblest ideas that ever swelled a human heart with noble pride.

From the home city of Mr. Berger thus wrote a former citizen of Milwaukee, a poor immigrant boy born on the banks of the Rhine, who, in this wonderful land of opportunity, became successively a Union general, diplomat, United States Senator, and Secretary of the Interior, and helped save the Union that we might live under the folds of freedom's flag.

I commend the words of Carl Schurz, Republican, statesman, patriot, American, to those who enjoy the blessings of liberty and yet threaten us with bloody revolution and advocate rifles and bullets. As the youth from the river Rhine, with hundreds of thousands of his countrymen, turned toward America, the refuge of the oppressed, so the world of yesterday turned to America to help strike down the chains of a mad Prussian militarism that once crushed Schurz and his compatriots, but is now destroyed. He who would overthrow the Government of Washington, of Lincoln, and of the lowly immigrant boy Schurz, a Government that holds the torch of liberty for the world, "the depository of the hopes of humanity," he who would suggest bloody revolution or exchange this Government with its hopes, ideals, possibilities and opportunities, for the flag of communism, of Bolshevism, does not understand the privileges of American citizenship. Lincoln, Garfield, McKinley, all of humble birth, all once leaders on the floor of this House, all struck down by murderous bullets while filling the highest place in the world, all loved their country, even as we of this day and generation love it.

With calm, even-tempered justice they governed and finally gave their lives for a Government that still lives. In our deliberations and decisions may we be guided by the spirits of the great Americans who have gone before, who lived for America, who died for America. Let us preserve that America from those from within or without who would destroy, in order that law, peace, and liberty—not anarchy—may ever find resting place within our borders.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. DAVID J. O'CONNELL,

OF NEW YORK,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, November 10, 1919.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Mr. Speaker, this bill is in the line of a real constructive program.

I have given very close attention all day to the debate on this important measure, which was so ably prepared and splendidly presented by the important and energetic Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries of the House. Together with my colleagues I am very much gratified to know that, while before the great World War our total tonnage upon the seas aggregated 2,000,000 dead-weight tons, we have now amassed under the American flag something over 8,000,000 dead-weight tons. It has been an amazing and gratifying achievement, one to which we may all point with pride and satisfaction as another evidence of the enterprise of the American people, and of their ability to meet the exigencies of any occasion, no matter what may be the difficulties.

When the sudden demand for vessels arose, our Government, realizing the urgency, did not await the slow and uncertain process of new construction, but with characteristic determination scoured the sea lanes of our country and by every means obtained the necessary ships. Some were bought in our own country, some in foreign ports, and under the act of war we acquired still others from their German owners. Our own shipyards turned out the balance, until to-day we are in the enviable position of being able to show to the world the magnificent tonnage figures which are revealed in the report of the committee in charge of this bill.

We are, as I have said, proud of this record, and have reason to be. Now that this tonnage is available for use it is of imperative importance that harbor docking facilities be provided, if we are to derive a real and permanent benefit from this most promising source of trade and commerce.

I would call to the attention of the committee, whose interest in this subject justly deserves commendation from both sides of the House, that the extraordinary docking facilities now being prepared in the harbor of New York at Jamaica Bay be given very careful and earnest consideration.

Large sums of money have been wisely set aside both by the United States Government and the city of New York for the purpose of increasing the docking accommodations at the point to which I have referred. The geographical location of Jamaica Bay offers the most logical reason for its selection by the committee as one of the best, if not the best, spot to harbor the splendid fleet of the merchant marine, which is destined to insure our equality if not our supremacy among the nations of the earth upon the high seas.

The Members of the House whose districts abut shore fronts are naturally familiar with the difficulty of increasing harbor accommodations. Nearly all, if not all, harbors are cramped for space and inadequate to hold even the tonnage that now jam their ports. In my opinion, it would be wise for the committee, in order to insure the best results, to pay a personal visit to Jamaica Bay and convince themselves beyond question it is the most feasible place in which to accommodate the many ships that will have occasion to come into the port of New York for years to come. Under the American owners provided in this bill, we will go on and on until we obtain our place among the leaders of maritime commerce in the world.

OF

HON. MILTON H. WELLING,

OF UTAH,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, November 11, 1919.

Mr. WELLING. Mr. Speaker, there was held in Lafayette Park this morning the first annual celebration of armistice day. The program was participated in by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD], the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY], and the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MILLER].

These men represent States at the four corners of our country. As a part of the ceremony a number of California redwood trees were planted, embedded in soil brought from these four corners of the Republic.

Gen. Pershing participated as the representative of the Army. Gen. Barnett represented the marines.

After planting these young giant trees the address of dedication was delivered by Mr. CLARENCE F. LEA, our able and genial colleague from California, in whose district most of these great trees grow. The address is so admirable and the occasion so memorable that it ought to be preserved.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by printing Mr. LEA's address in the RECORD.

The address is as follows:

"Mr. Chairman, ladies, and gentlemen, the committee having this occasion in charge considered what could be placed here that would best be emblematic of the event we observe. They finally decided to go to the great forests of America and select a living thing, America's noblest tree, and place it here as emblematic of the sentiment of America on this day.

"As my home is near the home of these trees, I have been called here as their friend and neighbor to introduce these youngsters to you people of the East and tell you something about them and their wonderful family.

"The home of these trees is by the shores of the Pacific. For 500 miles they stand like rugged sentinels on the western rim of the continent. Practically all of them are within 30 miles of the coast and most of them are within range of the rumbling roar of the ocean.

"They were unknown to civilization at the time of the discovery of America. Scientists have determined that once they were scattered over a wide portion of the earth, but as discovered by the white man they were confined entirely to the west coast of the United States and principally to the area they now occupy.

"No one knows what white man first saw the redwood trees. Early in the sixteenth century the Spanish and Russian explorers sailed along the northern coast of California. They found a rocky shore and few, if any, friendly landings. Doubtless as they skirted the coast of the Pacific along Marin, Sonoma, Mendocino, Humboldt, and Del Norte Counties they saw these forests covering the western slopes. But no one is able to tell us whether or not they landed and became familiar with the trees, whose foliage they must have seen from the decks of their ships. The trunks of those trees reach higher than the mast of any ship. Their boughs reached out and gathered more wind than the sail of any ship then on the ocean. But it is altogether probable that the Spanish and Russian explorers returned to their native land without knowing the true character of the forests they had seen.

"In the latter part of the sixteenth century Drake came to the northern coast of California and in some bay north of San Francisco secured timber and repaired his ship. It is uncertain in what bay Drake landed, but it is highly improbable that there is any California bay north of San Francisco in which he could have landed and repaired his ship without discovering the redwoods. The redwood tree became known to science about a century and a quarter ago, but it was finally reclassified less than 80 years ago.

"In 1830 the north Pacific coast was visited by Douglass, a scientific English explorer. He reported that the redwood 'was the great beauty of California vegetation.' He wrote that these trees gave the mountain an appearance of 'something that plainly tells we are not in Europe.' He further reported they are 'so majestic as to inspire the beholder with emotions of awe.'

"Civilization was first taken to California through the Spanish missionaries. Beginning in the southern part of the State they established a chain of 21 missions, each supposed to be a day's journey apart, extending into northern California. The most northerly of these missions was established in Sonoma County, north of San Francisco Bay. The line of these missions skirted part of the redwood forests, but according to the custom of the Spanish people, they preferred to erect their buildings from adobe rather than this timber.

"In the early part of the last century the Russians investigated the California coast with a view of colonization, and finally decided to accept these redwoods as the attractive feature that determined their colonization on the Pacific shore in the western part of Sonoma County. Thus it so happened that occidental and oriental civilization, reaching out around the earth for conquest and aggrandizement, met on the opposite sides of this redwood belt in Sonoma County, Calif. The Russian colonists went into the redwood forests, converted the trees into lumber, fenced their farms, built their homes, and established a shipbuilding plant. They constructed the first ocean-going vessel launched on this side of the Pacific. They grew and prospered for 30 years. They had their cultivated farms, their flocks, herds, their schools, and church. One day a Russian ship entered the port. In a little while the bell in the old Greek church, which still stands there, was ringing and the cannons on the cliff overlooking the port were firing, summoning the colonists to assemble. The head of the colony informed them that on account of impending trouble with the Spanish Government, Russia had ordered the colonists to abandon their location at once.

"For them there was nothing to do but obey. The Russian colonists abandoned all the accumulations of their toil. They left their homes and the graves of their kindred. As mourners they departed from their chosen land. So ended the last of oriental attempt to colonize the western shores of the United States. The redwood structures they built still stand as monuments to their labors and their disappointed hopes.

"A little over 70 years ago the world heard of the discovery of gold in the interior of northern California. Adventurous, courageous men from every section of the earth turned their faces toward the gold fields. The trip was a hard and perilous one, whether it was around Cape Horn or across the disease-infected Isthmus of Panama, or a six-months' trip with oxen and horses across the plains, the mountains, and the deserts between here and California. It took the hardy courage of the pioneers to meet the task. New discoveries constantly increased the gold-bearing area. Soon the pioneers were searching the northern coasts of California in the hope of finding a water transportation route to the interior gold fields of the northern mountains. Then it was for the first time that the heart of the redwood section became of great interest to the white settlers and the permanent development of the country began.

"A sawmill was erected in Humboldt County. It is said to have cost about $100, some additional equipment cost something like $20 more, and laboring men were paid $10 a day. At the present time there are mills operating in these forests with investments of over $2,000,000, and I know of one in which the traveling crane for handling the logs in the yard of the mill alone probably cost over $50,000.

"It was many years after the discovery of redwood before its commercial value was appreciated. To-day no one living near the redwood section would want to board up a house with pine if he could get redwood. But only 65 or 70 years ago pine timber was being transported from the eastern shores of the United States, around Cape Horn, and used for constructing buildings in the edge of the redwood forests.

"The commercial world has been much attracted by the lumber-producing qualities of redwood; the immense size and height of the trees, the density with which they grow, and their suitability for lumber have given them a distinct place among the lumber-producing trees of the world.

"At my home at Santa Rosa, Calif., I attend a church that was entirely built of one redwood tree, for which about 70,000 feet of lumber was used. Many single trees have made a much larger quantity of lumber. Some lumberman in California has figured out that there are sufficient redwood trees on some acres of land to construct a building, covering the same 10 stories high.

"At the time of the destruction of San Francisco the roofs and sides of 75 per cent of its houses were built of redwood. This lumber has been shipped to every continent in the world. Its qualities have made it useful in nearly every line of construction. It is equally useful in the hands of a section man for a railroad tie or in the hands of a carpenter for a mudsill or in the hands of a cabinet maker for ornamental furniture.

"This tree is an emblem of utility. All trees are. Perhaps one of the most dismal conceptions that the imagination could draw would be a treeless world. From the beginning of time the forest has been for man—shade, shelter, and fuel. The tree has contributed much to his happiness and comfort. At times the great trees of the forest have been selected as places of worship. Men have rested in the tree's friendly shade; with its lumber they have built 'home, sweet home,' and with its fuel they have prepared their food and protected their bodies against the chilling blasts.

"The foliage of the forest has received the poisoned winds and sent them on pure. They invite the rain and turn its waters into the earth as a storage reservoir to make the grass grow and serve the purposes of man and beast.

"Permit me to digress to say that while I speak in admiration of these great trees, one disagreeable thought can not be eliminated from my mind. Those great typical trees seem to be approaching extinction. Everywhere encroaching upon those primeval forests the woodsman's ax, the screech of the donkey engine, and the hum of the band saws are heard.

"A few hours with the ax and saw and the great tree quivers from root to pinnacle. It comes down with a mighty thud; there is a crashing roar, the broken limbs fly up, fall back, and there is a vacancy among the solemn red columns of the forest. The majestic and reverence-inspiring giant has fallen. Ten centuries may not be able to replace it.

"A commercial world has appraised the value of those trees in terms of the lumberman's price list. It has not reckoned the ages it took them to grow. Those trees are nature's children of the centuries. They are one class of that few living, silent creatures of earth that have power to touch the hearts of men and send their thoughts upward in reverence to their Creator.

"Wherever civilization has gone, man has poured out his treasures and made great sacrifices to secure and develop those things that delight his vision. It is for that he carefully designs his home, cultivates the rose, maintains his lawn, prefers to ride where the wild flowers bloom, and everywhere ornaments his surroundings. In all our land scarcely is there a home so humble but that upon its walls hangs some picture portraying the beauty and majesty of nature. For this our people have patronized the sculptor and the artist of every land. Pictures of redwood trees have gone into innumerable homes. Thousands of dollars have been paid for a single painting portraying these trees. It is not possible that we should appreciate the picture more than the subject.

"In these great forests the eye can behold not only pictures, but a masterpiece of the Great Artist; not the product of an hour, but the finished work of centuries. If these noble trees are preserved, it must be by those who have the imagination and the appreciation.

"I am happy to say that at the present time a movement is on foot and apparently well advanced toward the preservation of typical groves of these trees. Hon. William Kent and Stephen Mather and the people of Humboldt County, Calif., have already pledged very substantial sums for their preservation. A league called Save the Redwoods League is entering enthusiastically upon this undertaking, and we may well wish them the success the merit of their purpose deserves.

"The triumph of Germany would have meant a world tyranny. For us it would have meant long years of the bitterness of humiliation and defeat. Hard terms would have been placed upon us, and many years would have elapsed before the burden could have been taken from our children's shoulders. If, in the world's greatest war, we did nothing more than defeat Germany's purpose and preserve the world that was, no patriotic American will ever say the victory was not worth all the treasure and precious blood that it cost. But it is the hope of America, it is the hope of civilization, that we have accomplished more than victory. As long as history tells the story men have hoped and dreamed of a time when no people can profit by a war of aggression, when disputes between nations shall be peaceably settled under principles of right instead of upon the battle field by the power of might. Out of the sacrifices of this war the people of America hope to gain something more than victory, something of hope and promise for the future of America and the world. They even dare to hope for something like that time of peace of which men have dreamed.

"As a token of this day we might build a massive monument. We might go to our quarries and bring our finest marble, polish it with the skill of experts, and with the stroke of an artist engrave upon it the event we observe. We might place upon it the names of those who gave their lives or sacrificed for our country's cause. But that monument would be only a cold, inanimate thing to remind us of yesterday. At the end of a century the polish would have disappeared and the names be dimmed by the disintegration of time.

"If these trees grow like their parents in their native forests, when a century shall have passed away they will be comely with the beauty and vigor of youth. When three or four centuries shall have passed they will not have reached their failing years. A thousand years may pass and, if true to their native growth, these trees will still lift their green crowns higher than the Dome of our Capitol, and every day of those 10 centuries their foliage will have been green—a living thing, a reminder of the to-morrow, the promise to be kept, and the hope to be fulfilled.

"The scientists named these trees 'semper virens,' which, I understand, being liberally interpreted, means 'always living.' They are tenacious of life. They cling to it through the centuries. They seem to love life. A fallen tree has been known to send out of its body a green shoot, still struggling for existence, reluctant to give up life. Cut down a tree, and the roots will send up new trees that will encircle the old stump as faithful children should surround their parents in the hour of adversity. Emblematic! So should the children of America cling to her ideals.

"No nation ever went to war for a cause more just. No nation ever went to war freer from mercenary motives. No nation ever went to war with a more earnest, unselfish desire to serve mankind. America was noble in war; she can not afford to be less in peace. As emblematic of the ideals and purposes of America, these trees are dedicated—'always living.'"

OF

HON. JAMES V. GANLY,

OF NEW YORK,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, November 10, 1919,

On the following resolution:

"Resolved, That under the facts and circumstances of this case Victor L. Berger is not entitled to take the oath of office as a Representative in this House from the fifth congressional district of the State of Wisconsin or to hold a seat therein as such Representative."

Mr. GANLY. Mr. Speaker, Victor L. Berger, a duly elected Representative from Wisconsin, is charged with disloyalty and his right to a seat in this Congress is challenged.

On the floor of this House this morning he has stated that he took back nothing from what he said in the speeches and articles made by him while this country was at war and on which this charge of disloyalty is based. In particular he reaffirms the so-called St. Louis platform, which, among other seditious statements, recommends "continuous active and public opposition to the war through demonstrations, mass petitions, and all other means"; "unyielding opposition to all proposed legislation for military or industrial conscription."

He advised young men of military age to read and follow this platform and act accordingly, which in plain English advised them to either desert their country or become slackers. He compared the noble and patriotic women of this country who urged their sons to rally to the flag to women of the lowest moral type.

For me, therefore, there is no doubt and no hesitation. Victor L. Berger should be excluded. To administer to him as a Member of this House the oath of office to support the Constitution and the laws of the land is almost sacrilege and is surely a shameful mockery. Victor L. Berger can not dodge the plain meaning of his own words by insinuating that he is being punished for his socialistic beliefs. Socialists, among them Berger himself, have been elected to and have served in Congress without question. Socialists have been loyal and faithful to their obligations as American citizens. Berger has not. I do not care whether the man be Socialist, Democrat, or Republican, if he has been guilty of preaching the sentiments of Berger while we were at war, I should vote with equal promptness to exclude him as unworthy to represent any community in America.

Loyalty to our institutions, to our Government, to our flag, and country is the first test and qualification of a representative of the people. He must first be a true citizen who would be a true representative. And most especially at that time when America, with whole-souled devotion and heedless of the risk and cost, flung her men and her treasure into the Great War to save civilization and humanity; when from countless homes in this broad land dear ones marched away to fight under freedom's banner and left behind aching, anxious hearts of parents and wives and children. This day and time, when the scars made by that war are scarcely healed, when the burden and the care of its enormous cost are still keenly felt, demand the loftiest devotion and patriotism. Our people are bearing a heavy burden, but their faith and love of country are only stronger for the sacrifices they have made.

No group of non-Americans will be tolerated in this country to destroy the Republic built by those sacrifices of our people. America can and will destroy the traitor within as completely as she has the foe abroad.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. SAM RAYBURN,

OF TEXAS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, November 13, 1919.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following letter:

WASHINGTON, D. C., November 13, 1919.

Hon. SAM RAYBURN,
House of Representatives.

DEAR SIR: This is an appeal to you who are about to do a great injury to the live-stock business of the country (and other transportation as well) possibly, and as we fear, without knowing it, in the matter of transportation by that section of the Esch bill under the term "car service."

As many of you know, the writer has represented the stockmen of the entire West through our national organizations in matters of regulation of rates and carriers, looking after their interest in the enactment of the laws and their administration. Our interests are identical with the public interest. It is likewise identical with that of a well-operated railroad's interest in all matters of efficient service, peculiarly necessary in the live-stock business. On the subject of what they shall charge we may sometimes differ, and when we do the commission is an open forum to settle that. So it is on rules and practices.

Privately owned and privately operated railroads have built our country. Our country has built the railroads. The law of natural selection and the survival of the fittest has developed the men who have successfully operated them. They can not be picked up and put in places to direct what is to be done in the complexity of railroad operation. It is idle to talk about it. However great and good a man may be, there is a limitation to his ability to "pick a load" of brains or even the priming into the best head, much less into the boneheads with whom he will come in contact, in spite of all the care.

This bill places in the hands of the Interstate Commerce Commission the duty to take hold of the traffic of every railroad where there is a shortage of cars, congestion of traffic, or other emergency, and to commandeer and direct the use of all locomotives, cars, and facilities for operation, and appoint agents who must be obeyed promptly, "Johnny on the spot," and they can direct all manner of things that the President could do under the Federal control act, in short, operate the railroads by spells, a power which the commission ought to use but sparingly, but being directed to use that power when there is an emergency, such as a "shortage of equipment" or "congestion" or "other emergency," it must be prepared to constantly use it or abdicate.

I call you who are familiar with the live-stock business to bear witness that at times of greatest movement of live stock in the principal range country, breeding and feeding territory of meat animals there has been a car shortage. Stock cars have not been fewer nor live-stock shipments greater during Federal control than previously, but they have been harder to get and less efficiently used during Federal control than ever before. We have with one voice demanded a return of the railroads to private ownership, control, and responsibility. That is the thing. That is where the shipper comes in. When they have to furnish cars and render good service or pay for it they will come across. That is the law of common carriers. Every sane and experienced stockman knows that. That is what private ownership and operation means. Now, what I am kicking about is that this bill proposes to do what will relieve the railroads from the responsibility by empowering a Government agency to take control and direction of locomotives, cars, and car supply, as well as the movement of traffic, which will be called for and sought every day of the year somewhere on some traffic, with constant interference with the freedom of the railroads to do the job under full responsibility.

I tried to show the committee the danger of this thing and wrote a special letter to Chairman ESCH, which will be found on pages 891 and 892 of part 6, House Committee Hearings. What was there said has not been answered. It can not be answered.

Now, here is a single example, familiar to Texas and Wyoming Members—and many others as well—which you can verify: Senator KENDRICK, who is president of the American National Live Stock Association, shipped some thousands of cattle from Wyoming to west Texas recently. Next year he will sell them. He may ship 10 cars to St. Louis via the Texas & Pacific Railway and Fort Worth. Reaching there they will be fed in clean pens. He has routed them Missouri, Kansas & Texas. The unloading pens in Oklahoma and Kansas are clean, as they are in all these States—no Texas fever ticks. An agent of the Interstate Commerce Commission, we can well assume, tells the railroad at Fort Worth to ship them over the Cotton Belt because of congestion on the Missouri, Kansas & Texas and Texas & Pacific. They must go that way. At some point in Arkansas the train is derailed—which is not unusual—the cars turned over, and the cattle swim out. They are in a tick country. Washouts prevent going either way, and the cattle begin to die in nine days. They can not go on. They finally all die. Senator KENDRICK has been helpless; so has the railroad. The loss is $25,000. Question: Who is liable? Again, there is a lady who is in the cattle business now visiting Senator KENDRICK in Washington, who has a ranch near Sheridan, Wyo. Drought has made it impossible to raise feed. There is no grass. She bought cottonseed cake at Paris, Tex. It was loaded in September and the billing sent to Sheridan. She has not got it yet. There is great congestion all over north Texas because of oil development and failure to relieve it by the Government's own, very own, agents. There is car shortage of stock cars in Wyoming and Montana, and they can not ship out. It takes a week now from eastern Montana to Chicago, with three feeds and 100 pounds shrinkage per head. All our own Government agents directing the movement. This lady is liable to lose lots of cattle in the blizzard now prevailing there. While that is going on the Panhandle of Texas has lost $10,000,000 and more for want of cars and facilities to ship out their wheat. Rotted outside on the ground. No cars; no ships; our own, very own, Government operation.

Now, I ask you the question: Can the Interstate Commerce Commission take hold of this congested-car shortage and other emergency situation and do it better than the Director General? Why does anyone think so?

Concede that it may make rules; it should not operate the railroads. Whenever the Government, by these agents spoken of in the "car-service" section of the bill, relieve the railroads of their responsibility, as must happen when the agent tells them what to do, as in the case of Senator KENDRICK'S shipment, that relieves them of any liability. So it is when that car of cottonseed cake is found stored away in congested yards in the oil district on the road to Denver, because of an embargo or priority order. Actual instances happened time and again in Texas and Oklahoma when carloads of wheat were laid out six weeks till it graded to sour and musty when it got through, and thus lost. Under Federal control railroads are liable for the damage, but not so when under private control, but directed by a selected agent at some terminal to do as they are bid. Other instances by the thousands, to prove ruin to shippers who must lose without recourse, will at once occur to you.

It is amazing to me that anyone should think for a moment of such an undertaking which, if put into effect, will destroy the responsibility for efficiency of transportation and leave the shipper the bag to hold. If I were running a railroad I would beg the commission to put an agent over me.

If you keep this section in the bill, then make the railroad and Government responsible for all damages, "just like they use to was." Let the law of common carriers apply to this conglomerate, and let it be for the man—and not "furninst"—who pays the freight. "Jones." Alas! where are his friends in the hour of travail?

If the railroad can not handle its transportation business without some agent of the Government there to direct the railway superintendent or employee what to do and when to do it, and thus relieve the railroad from liability for what it is compelled to do, and force the shipper to suffer the loss by the failure of the railroad to furnish transportation and perform the service, then let us continue the Federal control and patch that up. The whole remedy lies in one word—responsibility.

That part of the bill is commendable which requires railroads to file car-service rules and empowers the commission to modify them or to make rules itself in aid of securing or procuring and distributing cars and facilitate their use to the end of avoiding shortage of equipment or congestion, securing equality of treatment, taking care of perishable freight, securing prompt movement of necessities like fuel, water, food, and the like, in order to meet public necessities under ordinary conditions. But in cases of calamity and real emergencies requiring speedy cooperation of transportation facilities, to prevent suffering and for protection of life, directed by one hand to a given end of meeting an unexpected emergency like fire, flood, tornado, epidemic, riot, and bloodshed, famine, and such contingencies out of the ordinary, calls for relief by the exercise of the police power. It is not a transportation matter for a tribunal appointed for its qualifications and machinery to administer a law primarily intended for the purpose of making rates, rules, and regulations to secure reasonable and just treatment, and to prevent undue preferences and discriminations to facilitate the commerce of the country, between the States and with foreign countries.

These police powers generally are independent of the ordinary business which this tribunal has for its chief object and for the States to regulate and direct on the ground at the time, and Congress can not take it away, as this bill does, by a mere wave of the hand. Although there is in the bill a response to the public demand for cooperation in making rates and classifications where there is a conflict of jurisdiction, here is an emergency which makes cooperation with the State absolutely essential in order to carry on the business of transportation at all and to exercise the police power that the State has, and that can not be taken away, yet the State is not only ignored and all power vested in some agent of the commission to operate the railroad—for that is what it amounts to.

I appeal to your reason to not make this error. Why head this bill "A bill to provide for the termination of Federal control," etc., and yet put in this section 402, paragraphs (15) and (16), giving the commission complete power of operation? The only limitation is: Let conscience be your guide.

The condition precedent, to wit, shortage of cars or locomotives and congestion of traffic "in any section of the country," will be constant, with no dividing line geographically or with respect to dates when it exists or when it does not exist. The desire for Government direction of business, Government ownership, and operation and concentration of all activities of life at Washington, now abroad in the land, unconsciously, no doubt, in the minds of the proponents of this feature of the bill, really lies at the bottom of it.

The shipper may benefit from a rule as to car service, but not from a directed operation by an agent. With this sort of control over operation, irresponsibility must of necessity attach to every transportation service if the commission undertakes the task and private operation, with the shippers' rights protected, is effaced. So the question is: Are you going to have the railroads operated by the commission? Are you going to deprive the shipper of his right to hold the carrier responsible? Or will you confer this power in terms, yet expecting that the commission will not be prepared to carry it out? If it is prepared and undertakes it, chaos will reign as it never did before, and Government ownership will be the remedy.

I appeal to you and your associates to not bring on this calamity, and therefore urge you to strike from the bill paragraphs (15) and (16) of section 402, pages 48, 49, and 50, of the bill.

If the railroads are to operate their properties, let them do it under common-carrier liability.

S. H. COWAN,
Attorney for the American National Live Stock Association and constituent organizations, the National Live Stock Shippers' League, and the live-stock shipping interests concentrated in the league.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. EZEKIEL S. CANDLER,
OF MISSISSIPPI,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, November 11, 1919.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Speaker, on October 3, 1919, the Secretary of War issued the following statement:

(Time 4:00 p. m.)

From War Department News Bureau. #9
Immediate release. October 3, 1919.

INFORMAL STATEMENT BY THE SECRETARY OF WAR IN CONFERENCE WITH NEWSPAPER CORRESPONDENTS, OCTOBER 3, 1919.

I have given orders to return to the United States the bodies of American soldiers interred in Germany, Belgium, Italy, Luxemburg, North Russia, and Great Britain, the only question about those coming from north Russia being the fact that some of them were returned to France and interred there, so that the question of the consent of the French Government, or rather the whole question of returning the bodies of soldiers who are buried in France, which is very much the graver and larger problem, is involved to the extent that any of our deceased in Russia have been reinterred in France. But those who are buried outside of France will be returned at the earliest possible moment. There are, so far as I know, no international or diplomatic difficulties involved in any of those cases. The Siberian question is not included in this policy, and has not yet been determined.

In view of the very large number of dead interred in France, and the fact that they are accumulated in well-kept and well-cared-for cemeteries, and that these cemeteries will constitute a great field of honor in France, the War Department hopes that a large number of parents will sympathize with the feeling of the Department that it is the wiser and better course to leave these bodies in France; but the War Department has promised to return the bodies of those whose families insist upon it, as soon as arrangements can be effected.

I was gratified to read this statement from the Secretary of War, in which he said, "I have given orders, to return to the United States the bodies of American soldiers interred in Germany, Belgium, Italy, Luxemburg, north Russia, and Great Britain," because I know to return the bodies of these soldiers will give comfort to the hearts of their loved ones in many American homes. One hundred and eleven bodies from Russia arrived in New York City yesterday, and I think very properly a joint committee from the House of Representatives and the Senate of the United States was, pursuant to a concurrent resolution unanimously adopted by the House and the Senate, appointed to be present upon their arrival in that city to participate in appropriate ceremonies then held as a mark of respect and evidence of our country's gratitude for the supreme sacrifice made by those noble and patriotic American boys. I earnestly favor bringing the bodies of our boys home, and I hope now that our Government, having begun the return of the bodies of our dead, this duty of a grateful people will continue to be energetically performed until all have been returned where their loved ones express the desire to have them returned to their home and native land. Being desirous, however, to know fully the policy of our Government in reference to the return of the bodies of our soldier boys who had been killed in battle or died "overseas," on October 16, 1919, I addressed a letter to The Adjutant General of the United States in which I requested to be fully informed on the subject. I stated to him in my letter that I desired to be informed "so as I may incorporate it in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for general information. I get many letters on the subject, as do other Members of Congress, and therefore I think it would be a good thing to do." In response to that letter, written by me on October 16, I received a letter from The Adjutant General on October 27, 1919, which on that subject is as follows:

293.8 (Misc. Div.) fbd-bmg

WAR DEPARTMENT,
THE ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, October 27th, 1919.

Hon. E. S. CANDLER,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. CANDLER: * * *

In response to a circular sent out by The Adjutant General's Office some time ago to ascertain the wishes of the next of kin in the matter of returning the bodies of their dead to the United States, approximately 58 per cent indicated a desire that the bodies be returned; approximately 23 per cent indicated a desire that the bodies be not returned; and approximately 19 per cent of the next of kin were unheard from. It is therefore evident that a large number of relatives desire that the bodies be returned.

It is the policy of the War Department to return to the United States the bodies of American soldiers buried overseas in all cases where such return has been requested by the next of kin. With reference to those bodies whose return is not desired or has not been requested by the next of kin, the War Department thinks it best that they be interred in permanent cemeteries abroad and such cemeteries to be maintained and cared for as are the national cemeteries in this country.

As you probably are aware, the bodies buried in France can not now be returned to the United States due to restrictions which have been imposed by the French Government prohibiting the removal from and the transportation in France of military dead. The War Department, however, has requested the State Department to secure the consent of the French Government to a waiver or modification of present restrictions, to the end that the American dead may be returned to the United States.

With reference to the American dead buried in other countries of Europe, it is the policy to return them in all cases where such return has been requested by the next of kin, this without waiting for the result of the negotiations between our State Department and the French Government in regard to the removal of the dead from France. The Quartermaster General has been charged with the execution of this policy, and he is now making arrangements to carry it out.

The War Department thinks that the wishes of the next of kin as to whether or not their dead shall be respected and complied with, and it is the policy of the War Department to do that.

Trusting that this covers the information you desire, I am,

Very sincerely, yours,

P. C. HARRIS,
The Adjutant General.

It will be noted that in this letter from The Adjutant General it is specifically stated that "it is the policy of the War Department to return to the United States the bodies of American soldiers buried overseas in all cases where such return has been requested by the next of kin." In the last paragraph of the letter it is further stated:

The War Department thinks that the wishes of the next of kin as to whether or not their dead shall be returned should be respected and complied with, and it is the policy of the War Department to do that.

Therefore, if the next of kin have not already written the War Department requesting the return of the bodies of their beloved dead from overseas they should write at once and let their wishes in that regard be known. I know it will be consoling information to many sad and desolate homes and balm to the sorrowing and bleeding hearts of many American fathers, and especially many American mothers, to know that this great Government will, as an evidence of its continued gratitude, bring their loved ones back to them that they may be buried in the churchyards and cemeteries at home. It will be a great comfort and consolation to have them returned that they may be buried in the United States of America, over which floats the Stars and Stripes, the most beautiful flag in all the world. Over yonder they are so far away. Thank God! We will bring them back and tenderly lay them to rest in our own country to await the final day when they will be gathered with "the fathers" in that eternal home. Their glorious deeds will ever shine in increasing brilliancy with the flight of time and continually illuminate the pathway of duty in every crucial hour for all those of our countrymen who came after them and seek the attainment of the highest American citizenship. God bless the memories of our boys who on the field of honor died for our country. God bless and prosper the lives of our boys who fought for our country, nobly and bravely, and were permitted still to live and return home to continue to contribute in the future to the glory of our Republic.

Farms and Homes for Our Soldier Boys—H. R. 487.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. BENIGNO C. HERNANDEZ,
OF NEW MEXICO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, November 11, 1919.

Mr. HERNANDEZ. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, taking advantage of the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a set of resolutions adopted by the convention of the American Legion of New Mexico, composed of about 3,000 veterans of the late war of that State, I will have a few words to say in furtherance of one of the resolutions in reference to the soldier settlement bill, H. R. 487, known as the national soldier settlement act, or the Mondell bill.

Through resolution the veterans of the late war from the State of New Mexico expressed their views in regard to the hereinabove-mentioned legislation, and urged the Congress to take prompt and favorable action in regard to the legislation.

The people of New Mexico, through their legislature, during its session in the winter of 1919, with prophetic vision as they saw it that time, enacted legislation tending toward cooperation between the State and the United States in the settlement of soldiers, sailors, and marines of the late war upon State and other lands acquired or held by the State or Federal Government. It indicates that the people of New Mexico are intensely interested in this legislation, and they are willing to lend their aid by giving up part of the lands that were ceded to that State by the Federal Government, and also by using the funds derived by the sale and rentals of other lands ceded by the Federal Government to the State by the enabling act of 1910. They believe that the provisions of the soldier settlement bill are beneficent, workable, and feasible in every way.

Some of the opponents of this legislation fail to see any good in it, either for the returning soldiers or the country at large. Indeed, they must be very short-sighted if they can not see any good in a measure that will reclaim unproductive lands and make them productive by the expenditure of a comparatively small sum of money. Indeed, they must be short-sighted if they fail to see any good in a measure that will help at least a small percentage of our heroes in finding employment and securing a home and a piece of improved land somewhere in this land of ours.

The soldier-settlement bill has been very much misrepresented. It has been held up as a gigantic land-speculating scheme, and nothing more. In a good many instances the soldier boys have been led to believe that it is a scheme to force them to accept employment in the development of these projects, and later to colonize these projects whether they want to or not. Enough of them have already expressed their desire to take advantage of this measure, so that it will be worth while to undertake it. Practical men like Dr. Elwood Mead, who is an authority on the subject, says that it is absolutely feasible; that it has been tried in other sections of the country under private initiative; that it is not an Utopia. The provisions of the bill are very liberal in every way; it provides for loans to be made to the soldiers. We had before us in the Committee on the Public Lands, when the hearings were being had, practical business men such as Mr. Gooding, of the State of Idaho, who held the office of governor of that State for two terms, who has seen "the desert bloom like a rose" in certain sections of that State under the reclamation act and other acts amendatory thereto.

Speaking about helping certain classes of soldiers, Gov. Gooding said:

You are wanting to take care and help the fellow who needs help; that's the spirit that you want to get into this bill all the way through.

The making of the man, the making of the home, the opportunity, and that is all you are giving him, an opportunity; and I would not be for the bill, Mr. Chairman, if it did more than give him an opportunity.

Gov. Robertson, of the State of Oklahoma, in his testimony on page 248 of the hearings, said:

I have not heard any valid objection against the bill, except perhaps certain organizations of farmers that think that the Government will attempt to put these extra men into competition with them, and this is a very short-sighted idea, to say the least. There could not be too much production in agriculture.

One of the great troubles that confronts us in that new State is the increase in tenantry. We want to stop that if possible, and to that end I suggested to the recent legislature a measure known as the "home-ownership law."

Gov. D. W. Davis, of the State of Idaho, testified before the committee and said:

I think a greater per cent of our soldiers than 20 per cent, as has been mentioned, will avail themselves of the opportunity of acquiring a tract of land in our State. They would be eager to acquire it.

Responding to a question of Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi, a member of the committee, Gov. Davis said:

I think that for some time to come the soldiers will take all the available land, and until there is a scarcity of soldiers I think that that provision should be maintained. The boys went to France and volunteered in the service of our country, and we stayed at home. Thousands upon thousands are here now that would gladly avail themselves of the opportunity that we are trying to give the soldiers in this bill for the purpose of making money.

Others have been taking advantage of the war conditions to make money, while the soldier has been over there fighting for his country for $30 a month and offering his very life in defense of the institutions that the wild-eyed reds in this country are now trying to tear down.

Quite a number of the States have enacted legislation similar to that enacted by the State of New Mexico, tending to cooperate with the Federal Government in the development of these projects in order to help the soldiers.

I am sure that the national convention of the American Legion will express its views in regard to this legislation and that those views will be favorable to this bill. To point out to the reclamation features of this legislation as something offensive and detrimental to it, in my opinion, is absurd. That is one of its many virtues.

Ex-Gov. William Spry, of Salt Lake City, Utah, said in part:

I am very strongly in favor of the bill which you are considering. I want to say at the commencement that there is no particular locality that I have any desire to represent as against any other locality. This is a great country, and there is no question in my mind but what in every locality of the United States there are certain lands that can be benefited by the provisions of this bill; for instance, the waste lands or the lands that have been turned out or forsaken in the New England States; and you will find, I presume, many scores, if not many hundreds of just such lands that perhaps originally had been productive but which to-day are not in use at all. They have been abandoned. You will find thousands upon thousands of acres in the Northwest and in the North of cutover timber lands that I think the provisions of this bill could be applied to. There are many hundreds of thousands of acres in the Southern States, wet lands, lands subject to drainage, that could be materially benefited by the provisions of this bill. There are also the arid lands, public lands of the West, that could be materially benefited; so that I do not think and have never regarded this bill as a sectional bill, because it is not; and if a proper apportionment is made of the appropriation which the bill asks for I can imagine that every State will receive some benefit in a greater or less degree.

To a question by Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado to ex-Gov. Spry, of Utah, Gov. Spry said:

Mr. TAYLOR. Well, Governor, you don't think that because this bill may not accomplish everything that everybody wants for all the soldiers, and because it does not cover the whole field of legislation that Congress will probably ultimately cover for the soldiers, that is no reason why this start should not be made in this direction?

Mr. SPRY. You never did enact a bill in Congress that accomplished everything that it was desired to do. It takes a series of legislative acts. It is a matter of compromise after all.

Mr. TAYLOR. And there will probably be a great many bills passed by Congress for the relief of the soldiers.

Mr. SPRY. No doubt about it. This is the foundation stone that is being laid to-day for the relief and for the benefit and for the help of the soldier who desires to be helped, not by way of any charity or anything of that kind, because I take it that there are few soldiers who would go on the lands under those circumstances, but the boys want a temporary aid extended to them. This lays the foundation and future legislation can build upon that foundation.

Hon. Charles Springer, of New Mexico, a very practical and successful business man and public-spirited citizen, appeared before the committee in behalf of the governor of the State of New Mexico and said:

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the governor of our State wired me requesting me to appear before this committee, chiefly, as I understand it, to urge the necessity of a certain amendment which has been proposed by Mr. HERNANDEZ, or a section of a bill which has been introduced by him. The reason for that is that our legislature passed a law creating a soldiers' settlement board, giving that board certain funds, to be derived from the sale and rental of lands heretofore granted to New Mexico by Congress, amounting to 300,000 acres. The act of Congress, called the enabling act of our State, provides that no lands heretofore granted by Congress, or the proceeds thereof, may be used for any other purposes than the purpose stated in the acts themselves granting the lands, and the purpose of this amendment is to permit the lands and the proceeds to be used for soldier-settlement projects and to pay the expenses of the soldier-settlement board. Two hundred and fifty thousand acres of those lands were granted for water reservoirs for irrigation, or that is the wording of the grant.

We have sold some of these lands and the proceeds are now invested in bonds or in permanent funds, and the rental of those lands have been accumulating heretofore in the water-reservoirs-for-irrigation fund. It has been appropriated from time to time by the legislature for various purposes, there being no apparent need of using that money by the State to build reservoirs. There was another grant of 100,000 acres of land for the improvement of the Rio Grande, and there appears to be no use for that land or of the money for this purpose by the State which would interfere with the use of the soldier-settlement board. We can not proceed now with the soldier-settlement board unless Congress will remove that restriction from the former act as to the use of that fund.

The CHAIRMAN. What did you say it was devoted to under the former act?

Mr. SPRINGER. It says for water reservoirs for irrigation purposes. There is nothing definite, but that is the wording of the act. We still have remaining more than ample lands for that purpose.

If there are any States that could not be benefited by the provisions of this bill, the fault is not with the bill; it is with the State; and there is no reason why the problems that the various States have had to deal with now for so many years past should be burdened upon this bill.

I quote from an interview given out by Senator HARDING, of Ohio, wherein he says:

The country must not fail in its great opportunity of throwing open the potential wealth of its idle lands, energy, and enterprise of its tested manhood through the adoption of a sound, practical soldier-settlement program that will mean an abiding union of man and soil. Moreover, it must not fail to offer opportunity for land settlement to its returning fighters that in all conditions may be considered just reward for their sacrifices.

If we are trying to get men back on the land and help the soldiers at the same time and develop our country like practical business men, let us give this measure proper consideration.

Farm, best home of the family, main source of national wealth; foundation of civilized society; the natural providence; the desert shall rejoice and bloom as the rose.

Whereas officers and enlisted men entering the Army from civil life during the recent war bore the same risks, the same responsibilities, the same burdens, under the same conditions as like officers and enlisted men of the Regular Army; and
Whereas National Guard, National Army, and Reserve Corps officers are being discharged on disabilities ranging from 10 per cent to total, which means that they receive after discharge only from $3 to $30 per month, while a Regular Army officer, if he is unfit for active duty, is retired on three-fourths of his pay with additional commutation of heat, light, and quarters; and
Whereas the present laws and regulations constitute an unjust discrimination in favor of a certain class of officers—the Regular Army—and in principle being un-American and unworthy the practice of a great democracy: Be it

Resolved by this State convention of the American Legion of New Mexico, That the existing laws and regulations do unjustly and unwisely discriminate in favor of persons whose interest was no greater and whose service was of no greater benefit to the Nation, and that such discrimination has a tendency to place the several branches of our military system on a different status, thereby causing friction and injustice; and

That this convention petitions the Congress of the United States to amend the present laws and regulations so as to place all disabled officers and enlisted men on the same basis as to retirement for their disability, whether they happened to serve in the Regular Army, the National Guard, the National Army, or the Reserve Corps; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the Senators and Representatives of New Mexico in the Congress of the United States.

Resolved, That not all has been completed with reference to aliens interned during the war, and that if they were detrimental to the safety of our Government in time of war, a time when loyalty is most needed, that they should not enjoy the benefits of peace, and that if they were justly interned they should be deported without delay.

Whereas the present commercial pursuits of the Japanese are rapidly becoming a menace to this country at large; and
Whereas the State of New Mexico would resolve that we discourage and abate this form of Japanese immigration and propagation in our State: Therefore be it

Resolved by the delegates to the American Legion convention at Albuquerque, this date assembled, That Japanese "picture brides" arriving here from Japan be denied entrance into the United States; and be it further

Resolved, That all leases of land to corporations controlled by Japanese, or to the American-born children of Japanese, be canceled; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to the Senators and Representatives of New Mexico to the Congress of the United States, asking them to use their influence toward the adoption of legislation tending toward the eradication of the Japanese menace mentioned above.

Whereas in recognition of the military service and to provide useful employment and rural homes for our soldiers, sailors, marines, and others who have served with the armed forces of the United States in the World War, the State of New Mexico, through its legislature, has created a soldier settlement board; and
Whereas there is pending in the Congress of the United States a bill having in view the same objects and purposes, which bill has been favorably reported out of the Public Lands Committee; and
Whereas there seems to exist some doubt as to the New Mexico Soldier Settlement Board being able to exercise the functions conferred upon it by the act of the State legislature, through lack of funds provided for that purpose; and
Whereas there seems to be unnecessary delays in the consideration and passage of the bill pending in Congress, not warranted by the demands of the conditions which confront us: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we commend the action of the people of New Mexico, through their representatives in the legislature, for their efforts as evidenced by the objects and purposes of the law creating the soldier settlement board; and we appeal to the executive and legislative branches of the State government to make certain at the earliest possible day the proper and complete fulfillment of the objects and purposes of the said law; and

Resolved further, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to the Hon. B. C. HERNANDEZ, Member of Congress from New Mexico, and to Hon. ALBERT B. FALL and to Hon. A. A. JONES, United States Senators from New Mexico, with the request that they do all within their power to expedite the passage of said congressional bill so that New Mexico and the Nation may be able to carry out the wishes of the people in regard to recognition of the requirements of our returned soldiers, sailors, and marines.

Whereas the development of the public-land States and particularly the wholly arid States is seriously retarded by the retention by the Federal Government of vast areas of land which can not be settled and developed under existing laws, and which, being nontaxable, produce no revenues to the States; and
Whereas the governors of the public-land States, at a conference held in Salt Lake City, Utah, August 21, 1919, joined in a memorial to the Congress asking that the public lands be ceded and set aside to the public-land States without any mineral or other reservations: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we, the New Mexico delegates to the New Mexico Convention of the American Legion, in convention assembled at Albuquerque, N. Mex., October 16 to 18, heartily commend the action of the governors of the public-land States in memorializing the Congress to cede the public lands to the States, and that we express our unqualified indorsement of the movement and stand ready to assist in whatever way our services may be available.

Resolved further, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the Hon. B. C. HERNANDEZ, Member of Congress from New Mexico, and to Hon. ALBERT B. FALL and to Hon. A. A. JONES, United States Senators from New Mexico, with the request that they do all within their power to hasten the passage of the bill now before Congress asking that the public lands be ceded to the public-land States without any mineral or other reservations whatsoever.

Whereas many hundreds of men from New Mexico entered the service during the recent war, and of these a number have already answered the last roll call and are being brought home to be laid in their final resting place; and
Whereas the veterans of this war, as are those of other wars, are entitled to be buried in a national cemetery; and
Whereas the National Cemetery at Santa Fe contains spaces for but eight more graves in its present improved portion, but there remains a portion of said cemetery still unimproved, and funds for the improvement of said portion are available: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by this convention here assembled, That it is the sense of the American Legion of the State of New Mexico that a suitable space for the final resting place of all the veterans of this war from the State of New Mexico should be provided in this State, where as in war they stood so in death they may lie, side by side, and that the National Cemetery at Santa Fe, N. Mex., is the fitting and proper place therefor; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of this legion inform our Senators and Representatives in Congress that such is the sense of this legion and urge upon them to take the necessary steps to have the unimproved portion of said cemetery set aside and immediately improved as a burial place for the veterans of this war.

Whereas under the existing construction of the insurance act, ex-service men and soldiers now in the service totally disabled by tuberculosis are not deriving benefits from war-risk insurance they hold; and
Whereas the War Risk Insurance Bureau does not recognize as total disability a patient who is in the advanced stages of tuberculosis; and
Whereas it is believed that this interpretation of the war-risk insurance act does not give the true intention of Congress who reframed this law: Therefore be it

Resolved by the State convention of the American Legion in convention assembled, That it recommend to the War Risk Insurance Bureau a broader interpretation of the insurance act so as to allow payments of insurance to policyholders in the advanced stages of tuberculosis; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the War Risk Insurance Bureau and to the representatives in Congress from this State; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be presented to the national convention.

Whereas the present compensation act passed by Congress does not cover adequately the disability of tuberculosis; and
Whereas in any case of tuberculosis there is a certain amount of permanent disability: Therefore be it

Resolved by the State convention of the American Legion assembled, That it recommends that in awarding compensation to the disabled tubercular ex-soldier, sailor, or marine, a fixed permanent disability be established; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the War Risk Insuracce Bureau; also to the national convention at Minneapolis.

Contested-Election Case of Carney vs. Berger.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. FLORIAN LAMPERT,

OF WISCONSIN,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, November 10, 1919,

On the following resolution:

"Resolved, That under the facts and circumstances of this case Victor L. Berger is not entitled to take the oath of office as a Representative in this House from the fifth congressional district of the State of Wisconsin or to hold a seat therein as such Representative.

Mr. LAMPERT. Mr. Speaker, I hope that this resolution will be passed by the House without a dissenting vote. We have been elected as Representatives of the American people. We took the oath to support the Constitution of the United States; that Constitution provides that no man can be a Member of this House of Representatives who, having previously taken an oath to support the Constitution of the United States, has given aid and comfort to the enemies thereof.

The evidence produced before the Elections Committee which investigated the case of Mr. Berger proved beyond the possibility of any doubt that he had given aid and comfort to the enemies of the United States. By every means and method at his command, by spoken and printed words, he had aided the enemies of the United States. During the trying period of the war his heart was never with America. He himself admits that he was opposed to the war. He was one of the men who were instrumental in drafting the treasonable St. Louis declaration of the Socialist Party, which "branded the declaration of war by our Government as a crime against the people of the United States and against the nations of the world." He admits that he believed in that declaration; that he subscribed to it; and that he still believes in it. What joy and comfort did this declaration give to the Kaiser when he heard of it? How much comfort it gave to him and to his military machine when they were assured by this declaration that a portion of the American population not only did not approve of the war but branded the taking up of arms against the Kaiser as a crime. Surely there must have been joy in Berlin and Potsdam when this news was flashed across the Atlantic. Surely their drooping spirits must have been strengthened by the assurance of a division in America in the war preparations and war activities.

I can not sit quietly by and allow at least a portion of the malicious declarations of Berger to go unchallenged and unanswered. I am an American citizen; I love America and her institutions; I worship the Constitution of the United States; I love law and order. As an American, I know that there was no other alternative for America, after the repeated violation of international law by the Imperial German Government, than to declare war. We need not now discuss the causes that compelled us to engage in this world struggle. I know that we were only actuated by the noblest purposes and impulses; that we took up arms against those who were bent on destroying all that we hold dear in order that this grand Republic of ours might continue to exist and that all the rights and privileges of freemen might be preserved unto us and all succeeding generations. To such a noble cause who could fail to respond? Five of my sons, all American born, responded to the call of their country [applause]—one of them will never return. He made the supreme sacrifice for the cause of democracy and sleeps in the fields of France. As a father who understands what heroic sacrifice in defense of liberty means, as an American who appreciates the valor and services of America's matchless Army, I resent with all the feeling of which I am capable the contemptible implication that my boys, together with the millions of other Americans, participated in a crime. I hurl back at Mr. Berger and all his followers my contempt and condemnation of his lying and treasonable declaration.

For all the damage that Mr. Berger has done during the trying period of the war he wants this House to reward him by admitting him to its membership. It is inconceivable that this could be done. The testimony presented before the committee is so overwhelming and convincing that it removes all possibility of even entertaining the thought that he is qualified or fit to represent the American people. By his conduct during the war when he has so faithfully served the enemy he has forfeited every right to be even considered an American citizen. We have room in this country for those who love American ideals and American institutions. But we have no room in this land of equality and opportunity for anyone who is bent on destroying all that we hold dear. We can not tolerate men of that type in our midst, much less can we have them represent us and voice the sentiments of loyal and liberty-loving Americans.

I believe that in this period of tremendous reconstruction we need men in the legislative halls of unquestioned love of country, of unshaken attachment to the Constitution of the United States. I know the temper of the loyal citizens of this country; I know it is the universal judgment of every American that Mr. Berger is wholly disqualified to sit in the American Congress. I trust that this resolution will pass unanimously. [Applause.]

Exclusion of Victor L. Berger.

OF

HON. WILLIAM N. VAILE,

OF COLORADO.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, November 10, 1919.

On the following resolution:

"Resolved, That under the facts and circumstances of this case Victor L. Berger is not entitled to take the oath of office as a Representative in this House from the fifth congressional district of the State of Wisconsin or to hold a seat therein as such Representative."

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Speaker, I hope and believe that this case has been correctly decided as between the United States of America and Victor L. Berger. It is a question that has imposed the gravest possible responsibility upon the membership of this House—the responsibility of saying that a man who has been regularly elected to membership here by a legal plurality of the votes in his district shall not take his seat as a Member of Congress. The House has decided against the admission of this man by a vote of 309 to 1. But this almost unanimous vote should not be taken to mean that the vote was taken inconsiderately. It was a question to be approached solemnly—I might say prayerfully—a question upon which, as the contestee himself correctly states, the future of representative government depends. We know that the committee in charge of this matter has worked laboriously and almost continuously for nearly six months. Mr. Berger has been represented before that committee by as able counsel as any in America. The committee carefully reviewed some 5,000 typewritten pages of the testimony at the Berger trial wherein he had been convicted of violation of the law providing a penalty for any person who, when the United States is at war, "shall willfully cause or attempt to cause insubordination, disloyalty, mutiny, or refusal of duty in the military or naval forces of the United States, or shall willfully obstruct the recruiting or enlistment service of the United States to the injury of the service or of the United States," or who shall conspire with others to do any of those acts. The committee's hearings, in which every possible opportunity was given to Mr. Berger to produce evidence and to amplify his defense, comprise some 3,000 closely printed pages.

The right of Congress to exclude would seem to be clear enough under section 57, Article I, of the Federal Constitution:

Each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own Members.

The House being the judge, its decision is, of course, subject to review only by the vote of the people of the United States at following elections. We invoke such review.

The question is not of election or returns; it is a question of qualifications. The Constitution has this, among other things, to say of qualifications:

Amendment 14, section 3: "No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or elector of President and Vice President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States, or under any State, who, having previously taken an oath as a Member of Congress or as an officer of the United States or as a member of any State legislature or as an executive or judicial officer of any State to support the Constitution of the United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof. But Congress may, by a vote of two-thirds of each House, reverse such disability."

This section is invoked in this case for the first time since the so-called "reconstruction period" immediately following the Civil War.

Victor L. Berger was a Member of the Sixty-second Congress, and as such, of course, took an oath to support the Constitution of the United States. The evidence conclusively shows that while the United States was engaged in war with Germany he did the following acts:

(1) Signed a proclamation and war program of the Socialist Party containing the following statements:

We recommend to the workers and pledge ourselves to the following course of action:

Continuous, active, and public opposition to the war, through demonstrations, mass petitions, and all other means within our power.

Unyielding opposition to all proposed legislation for military or industrial conscription. * * * Support of all mass movements in opposition to conscription.

We pledge ourselves to oppose with all our strength any attempt to raise money for the payment of war expense by taxing the necessaries of life or issuing bonds which will put the burden on future generations.

(2) Indorsed, editorially, in his paper, the Milwaukee Leader, an article in which the following, among other disloyal language, appears:

Conscription is upon us; the draft law is a fact. * * * You can not avoid it; you are being dragged, whipped, lashed, hurled into it. * * * War is the price of your stupidity, you who have rejected socialism.

(3) Indorsed, as a member of the national executive committee of the Socialist Party, a series of articles published by that committee intended and tending to encourage opposition to the selective-service act.

(4) Himself wrote a long series of similar articles and editorials in his paper, the Milwaukee Leader.

If these acts, committed after the war was a fact, did not give aid and comfort to the enemies of the United States it is difficult to imagine any acts which would have that effect.

But there is to my mind an even more conclusive and basic reason for excluding Victor L. Berger from membership in Congress than the specific acts of disloyalty for which he was convicted by the court, though, God knows, those acts would have been reason enough.

The Constitution provides—Article VI—that:

This Constitution and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof * * * shall be the supreme law of the land.

Victor L. Berger, on the floor of the House of Representatives, pleading his own case there, not a Member of the House, but permitted to there appear by the American desire for fair play, in colloquy with a Member of the House, asserted the right of "any large body of citizens" to disobey the supreme law of the land, the law which he was at that very moment seeking the right to make.

This case does, indeed, involve the right of free speech—of speech which would be free to destroy the Nation which our fathers fought to create and which our brothers and sons fought to save. It does, indeed, involve the survival of representative government. It involves the right of representative government to itself preserve its very essence of life.

Victor L. Berger is a brave man, and no doubt an honest man. So, it might be said, was Csolgoscz, the assassin of President McKinley. But Mr. Berger does not himself appear with the pistol or the bomb. He comes around instead with an election certificate; comes as the polished, educated, editorial and forensic defier of the law.

It was not a pleasant job to deny a seat to a man who had been regularly elected. It was a solemn, a momentous, an awe-compelling job. But we had it to do.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. RICHARD F. McKINIRY,

OF NEW YORK,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, November 10, 1919,

On the following resolution:

"Resolved, That under the facts and circumstances of this case Victor L. Berger is not entitled to take the oath of office as Representative in this House from the fifth congressional district of the State of Wisconsin or to hold a seat therein as such Representatives."

Mr. McKINIRY. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote to exclude Victor L. Berger as a Member of this Sixty-sixth Congress, not for any belief or act of his prior to the declaration of war, not because of any political principle he has espoused either now or in the past, and not even necessarily because he was convicted of sedition by a jury. But because on the floor of this House, in speaking in his own defense, he has convicted himself, out of his own mouth, of disloyalty to this country in the hour of its greatest need and danger. We have the power and we have the right to exclude him. The Constitution and the precedents uphold our authority and action. The committee which heard his case gave him a fair and impartial hearing, with every opportunity to defend and clear himself of this serious accusation. But when all is said and done it needed no report of any committee, nor any verdict of any jury, nor any prior utterances of Victor L. Berger to sustain his present expulsion. His own words in an attempt at defense emphasized his disloyalty to his country, his defiance of the law, and his failure to observe the sacred oath of the office he took as a Representative of the people to uphold its Constitution and the laws of the land. We, the Representatives of the people, would fail, indeed, in our most primary duty if we accepted as a Representative of the people one whose example, if followed, and whose advice, if observed, would have led to the destruction of this Nation.

Once the United States of America declared war, the plain, unmistakable duty of every true citizen was to rally to his country's flag with heart and hand. This is true not only of every citizen who sincerely believed in every step taken by the Government of this country prior to the declaration of war, but is true of every citizen, without exception, whether or not he approved the conduct of affairs prior to that time.

When America's youth with gallant devotion were fighting the battle of freedom far from home and family, he is only a traitor who behind their backs sought to weaken and dishearten the national spirit by denouncing the war and the Government, by sneering at the high ideals for which they fought, by counseling disobedience of the law, by preaching openly the overthrow of the institutions of our Government. Now that this country has emerged with glory from the agony of that conflict we find ourselves face to face with problems and dangers that require the highest type of patriotism and devotion to duty and belief in the fundamental principles of our Government on the part of every man who is called to office as a representative of the people. At this day and time there is no room in the council halls of this Nation for any man who is not a thorough American and who does not believe enthusiastically in the high destiny and aspirations of the American Republic. We are paying the price for the service we rendered to civilization. There are elements in our population who are not of the people of the United States, because they have not at heart the peace, the prosperity, and the existence of this country; who would destroy the Government of this country by uprooting the principles upon which it is founded. The time has come when every true American recognizes that there is no place in this country for any man who is not American first, last, and all the time. And, therefore, it is high time for us, the Representatives of the people, to speak in clear trumpet tones the message to Victor L. Berger and those who would copy his example that he and his kind need expect no weakness nor hesitation on the part of the authorities of this country, that law and order will prevail, and that this country of ours is no asylum for the enemies of its institutions.

Neither I nor, I believe, any Member of the House is influenced in the slightest degree in the action we are taking by the fact that Victor L. Berger is a socialist, because we know that there have been many socialists—principally that element of the socialists headed by John Spargo—who were loyal and true to this country throughout the entire war. We would be false to every true citizen of this country if we failed to stamp the conduct of Victor L. Berger with our disapproval. But above all things we would be false, indeed, to those who lie in Flanders fields if we failed in this high and sacred duty at this time. If we did, it would seem that we had forgotten that message so beautifully expressed by the poet:

To you from falling hands we throw
The torch; be yours to hold it high;
If ye break faith with us who die,
We shall not sleep, though poppies grow
In Flanders fields.

Victor L. Berger.

OF

HON. CARL HAYDEN,

OF ARIZONA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, November 10, 1919,

On the following resolution:

"Resolved, That under the facts and circumstances of this case, Victor L. Berger is not entitled to take the oath of office as a Representative in this House from the fifth congressional district of the State of Wisconsin or to hold a seat therein as such Representative."

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I would not deem it necessary to say anything at this time but for the fact that the attorney for Mr. Berger took it upon himself to quote from my remarks on the selective-draft act in the course of his argument before the special committee appointed to consider this case. From the voluminous extracts from speeches made by Senators and Representatives it is evident that Mr. Cochems went through the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD with a fine-tooth comb to find expressions which could be construed to show that there were those in Congress who entertained the same un-American ideas as Mr. Berger with respect to the late war. All that this able lawyer could find which met with his approval in anything that I said are two brief extracts, which appear on page 480 of the hearings:

Mr. COCHEMS. Congressman HAYDEN, on April 25, 1917, as appears on page 1105 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, said:

"Compulsory military service is not founded on confidence, but on timidity; it is not founded on freedom, but upon the denial of liberty; and it should always be avoided except when there is no other way to find soldiers."

Then on page 1107, the same day, Mr. HAYDEN said:

"Let us not pay Prussian militarism, which we are seeking to destroy, the compliment of adopting the most hateful and most baneful of its institutions."

Mr. Cochems seeks to use parts of a speech which I delivered prior to the passage of the draft law in justification of Mr. Berger's unpatriotic acts after that law went into effect. He was not fair enough to state that I voted for the passage of the draft act on April 28, 1917—CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 1557—neither was he candid enough to state that nowhere in the speech from which he quoted these meager extracts did I dispute the right of Congress to raise armies by conscription. Let me read some of the words which Mr. Cochems did not quote from my remarks delivered in the House on April 25, 1917:

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, this is the best piece of military legislation that has ever been offered at the beginning of any war in which this country has been engaged. A study of its terms will demonstrate that the authors of this legislation have familiarized themselves with the lessons taught by American history, and that they have carefully avoided the disastrous mistakes so common in other wars.

* * * * * * *

In this war we are starting out with the theory that the Government has a right to demand of each citizen that he serve his country without being paid a premium to do so. Therefore there is no mention of bounties in this bill. For the same reason permission is not granted for drafted men to furnish substitutes. Personally I would prefer that both of these evil practices be specifically prohibited, and I shall offer an amendment to that effect when the proper time comes.

Let me add right here that my amendment, which was a direct and positive prohibition against the payment of bounties to secure enlistments, the procurement of substitutes by men drafted, and the payment of money to escape personal military service, was adopted by the House on April 28, 1917. At that time I said:

There should be neither bounty jumpers nor substitutes, nor should the rich be able to avoid the risk of battle by the payment of money.

But I read a little more from my speech of April 25, 1917, which evidently did not suit Mr. Cochems, since he did not see fit to quote these passages:

COMPULSION WHEN NECESSARY.

I am no fanatical supporter of the volunteer system. Whenever necessity demands it, conscription is justified. I have but little patience with what is called the political principle that an American citizen can not be compelled either to defend his country or to fight for the democratic principles upon which this Government was founded. In discussing this question in Arizona during the last political campaign I was particular to state on all occasions that in time of war, if for any reason volunteers can not be obtained, conscription is not only authorized by the Constitution but justified by necessity.

When this country goes to war it is not your war nor my war, but everybody's war; and America has the right to say that liability to bear the brunt and the burden and the agony of the struggle shall rest on all of her sons. When that time comes no man should be permitted to pick and choose whether or not he will serve in his country's cause. We are in a great war at this very moment, a war that we must win, for if the Imperial German Government be victorious and thereby obtain dominion over the world it will be but the beginning of other wars, because humanity could not long endure the yoke.

I am not here to say that the blow that we are preparing to strike against Germany should in any wise be weakened by the failure to get recruits into our Army. There should be behind that blow every ounce of the strength of this great Nation, because the sooner the victory is won the sooner can our soldiers return to their homes and to the pursuits of peace. It is by reason of my sincere conviction that volunteers who train and fight of their own free will can hit a prompter and harder blow than conscripts that I am pleading that the voluntary system be given a fair trial before it is condemned. An Army composed of men who are the masters of their own souls, men who know what they are fighting for and why, is the most effective force that we can employ to bring this war to an early and a successful termination.

I desire to state, in conclusion, that the question before this House to-day is, Has such a compelling military necessity been proven that we should abandon the traditional plan of raising armies by voluntary enlistments and secure our soldiers by conscription? No one is more anxious than I to see all those who fight for democracy emerge victorious from this war, and if I believed that nothing but an Army composed of millions of Americans could bring about the destruction of Prussian militarism, which threatens to involve the world, I would not hesitate to vote to draft all the men that are needed to complete the work so nobly begun by our fellow democrats who are fighting in France.

* * * * * * *

The American volunteer, under trained officers, can more quickly learn the art of war than any other man on earth. Why waste time teaching unwilling conscripts when better material can be had for the asking? Who knows how many Americans will volunteer? Nobody. The only way to find out is to try; and I want to see every proud-spirited man given a chance to volunteer before any man is drafted.

Mr. Cochems evidently turned every page of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in his effort to find something which would bolster up the case of his client. When he came to a speech which I delivered on August 7, 1917, on conscientious objectors to military service, I dare say he did not long consider the advisability of quoting the following:

There is logic in the objection of the anarchist. He will not obey any command of the State for the sole reason that it is a command. He desires a life free from all external control, because he believes that each individual should be free to determine his own course of action. The anarchist resists the heavy hand of the State on all occasions, and is therefore acting normally when he refuses to be drafted into the Army.

The syndicalists, of which the Industrial Workers of the World are the American example, also have some measure of logic in their opposition to the draft. Why should a man who denies that social reform can be accomplished by the will of the majority as expressed through the ballot, who seeks to turn over all of the industries to the workers by "direct action," who discourses on the "international solidarity of labor" and proclaims himself a "citizen of the world," be expected to view with favor a plan which forces him to abandon the "one big union" and go forth to fight for the Government that he has been denouncing?

SOCIALIST OBJECTORS.

The socialist, upon the contrary, has no such philosophy to guide him. To one who believes in the collective ownership and management, through the State, of all the means of production and distribution it follows that the lawful commands of those who manage the affairs of the Government must be obeyed, for otherwise such a scheme of things would not long endure. Obedience to the authority of the State must, therefore, be a socialistic virtue, and the individual socialist who now sets up his personal judgment against the will of the majority can not claim consistency as one of the reasons for his resistance.

The socialists of the United States have sharply divided upon the question of approving or disapproving the act of Congress which declared the existence of a state of war with Germany. Many of them are able to see that when militarism makes an attack upon democracy the immediate duty of men of every shade of political belief is to rally to the cause of liberty and freedom. Jaurés did this for France as the last act of a life devoted to agitation, if not rebellion, against his Government, and the leading men of every political party walked in his funeral procession behind the blood-red flag of revolutionary socialism as a tribute to an honest man who clearly saw his duty and did not let his past prevent him from performing it. [Applause.] The French socialists, as a unit, followed the example of Jaurés, and I only wish that I could speak as well of their American comrades. Unfortunately, not a few of our socialists still seek to distract attention to their prewar theories at a time when the fate of democracy depends upon utter unity.

The division among the Socialists of the United States, to which I referred, is well illustrated by comparing the majority and minority reports presented to the emergency national convention of the Socialist Party held in St. Louis on April 7, 1917—the day after the declaration of war. John Spargo, for the minority, offered a resolution, which was defeated, that, in part, reads as follows:

Our guiding principle in all that concerns our relation to the people of other lands is internationalism. We are internationalists and antimilitarists.

But internationalism does not mean for us antinationalism. * * * We repudiate the claim made by some that loyalty to this Nation is inconsistent with true internationalism. Those who say that socialism involves the view that the working class has no nation to call its own; that all nations are alike; that there is nothing to choose between a militarist autocracy and a democratic republic, do not preach socialist internationalism, but pernicious reactionary nonsense. * * *

Internationalism presupposes nationalism. It is the interrelation of nations. The maintenance of national integrity and independence is an essential condition of internationalism. * * * As internationalists we unequivocally assert the right of nations to defend themselves, their institutions and rights.

As a corollary to that statement we assert the right of Socialists to participate in such defense. Marx, Engle, Bebel, Liebknecht, and particularly all the great founders and teachers of our movement have taught this. * * *

Throughout the war Germany has acted with brutal lawlessness and inhumanity, not only against her enemies but also against peaceful and law-abiding neutral nations, including our own. * * * The provocation to war, which this Nation has borne with a patience and forbearance which will glow brightly in our history, has been great indeed. No nation with power to defend itself has, in modern times, endured so much. * * *

To profess indifference to the result of the war now being waged, to desire either that the war end in a draw or in the defeat of the Entente Powers, with which this Nation is allied, is treachery to the principles of international socialism.

Furthermore, it is treachery to the democratic principles and institutions of America. The identification of socialism with this disloyalty to the essential principles of Americanism would destroy every hope of ever winning the great masses of the American people to our cause. We assert that socialism is not disloyal to the interest of this Nation.

Now that the war is an accomplished fact, for the reasons stated we hold that it is our socialist duty to make whatever sacrifices may be necessary to enable our Nation and its allies to win the war as speedily as possible.

The majority of the St. Louis Socialist convention, led by Victor L. Berger, adopted such declarations as the following, and to which he has to-day declared that he still adheres:

We brand the declaration of war by our Government as a crime against the people of the United States and against the nations of the world.

In all modern history there has been no war more unjustifiable than the war in which we are about to engage.

No greater dishonor has ever been forced upon a people than that which the capitalist class is forcing upon this Nation against its will.

* * * * * * *

We recommend to the workers and pledge ourselves to the following course of action:

Continuous, active, and public opposition to the war through demonstrations, mass petitions, and all other means within our power.

Unyielding opposition to all proposed legislation for military or industrial conscription. Should such conscription be forced upon the people, we pledge ourselves to continuous efforts for the repeal of such laws and to the support of all mass movements in opposition to conscription. We pledge ourselves to oppose with all our strength any attempt to raise money for payment of war expense by taxing the necessaries of life or issuing bonds which will put the burden upon future generations.

Mr. Speaker, I shall vote for this resolution. I am convinced that Victor L. Berger is ineligible to be a Member of the House of Representatives because of the third section of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution, which provides that—

No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress who, having previously taken an oath, as a member of Congress, or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any State legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any State, to support the Constitution of the United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same, or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof. But Congress may, by a vote of two-thirds of each House, remove such disability.

The evidence in this case conclusively proves that by his seditious utterances and acts subsequent to the declaration of war on April 6, 1917, Victor L. Berger did give aid and comfort to Germany and Austria, enemies of the United States, notwithstanding the fact that as a former Member of Congress he had taken an oath to support and defend the Constitution. I have taken the same oath of loyalty to our Government, and under my oath I can do nothing else than vote to prevent this disloyal man from holding a seat in the House of Representatives.

Contested-Election Case of Carney against Berger.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CLAY STONE BRIGGS,

OF TEXAS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, November 10, 1919,

On the following resolution:

"Resolved, That under the facts and circumstances of this case Victor L. Berger is not entitled to take the oath of office as a Representative in this House from the fifth congressional district of the State of Wisconsin or to hold a seat therein as such Representative."

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Speaker, in discharging my constitutional duty of voting to deny Victor L. Berger, of Wisconsin, a seat in the House of Representatives of the United States, I take this opportunity to say that my action is not prompted by any disposition to deny the fifth district of Wisconsin its undoubted right to be represented in Congress by a representative of its own choice, nor because Victor L. Berger is a member of the Socialist Party, but because from the evidence in this case before the Committee on Elections No. 1 of the House of Representatives, including the testimony of the said Victor L. Berger and his own admissions in the House of Representatives, the applicant has been conclusively shown to have been disloyal to the Government of the United States, and to have given aid and comfort to its enemies during the period when this country was at war with Germany and Austria-Hungary and the very life, liberty, and happiness of the American people were at stake.

Although Victor L. Berger has been convicted in a trial court of the United States of violating the espionage law, yet in view of his appeal from the judgment of conviction which has not yet become final I have not accepted such judgment of the trial court as a basis for my own conclusion, but have examined the record of the evidence taken by the election committee and have listened to the argument of the said Berger delivered in the House of Representatives in his own defense and have become absolutely convinced of his guilt of disloyalty and treachery, when he should have been supporting and sustaining the United States with every resource and power at his command.

A native of Austria, he came to this country at an early age and became a citizen of the United States. In 1910 he was elected as a Socialist to the Sixty-second Congress from the fifth district of Wisconsin and took the oath of office to support the Constitution of the United States, serving as such Member of Congress from March 4, 1911, to March 4, 1913. At the election in November, 1918, he was elected from the same district as a Socialist to the Sixty-sixth Congress, and it is by virtue of such election that he claims the right to a seat in the present House of Representatives.

Section 5, Article I, of the Constitution of the United States provides, "Each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own Members."

Section 3 of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States provides, "No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress who, having previously taken an oath as a Member of Congress or as an officer of the United States or as a member of any State legislature or as an executive or judicial officer of any State to support the Constitution of the United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof. But Congress may, by vote of two-thirds of each House, remove such disability."

In 1898 Congress passed an act providing "That the disability imposed by section 3 of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution to the United States heretofore incurred is hereby removed" (U. S. Stats. L., vol. 30, ch. 389, p. 432).

There can therefore be no doubt that if Victor L. Berger did give aid and comfort to the enemies of the United States, he is disqualified as a Member of Congress and not entitled to a seat in that body. The act of 1898 does not attempt to deal with any cases of disqualification except those arising prior to the passage of that law. The act did not and could not repeal the amendment to the Constitution, and all that can be done by Congress is to deal with cases of disqualification as they arise and determine whether they shall be removed or allowed to remain. Any disqualification, therefore, of the said Victor L. Berger still exists, as there has not been any action by Congress removing the same.

No sooner had war been declared than Victor L. Berger started to do everything in his power to destroy the patriotism of the people of the United States and cause them to repudiate their Government in the struggle with Germany.

As a delegate to the national Socialist convention, held at St. Louis April 7, 1917, the next day after the United States had declared war against Germany, the said Victor L. Berger took a most active part in framing and adopting, as well as signing, the so-called war program adopted by that convention.

The very first paragraph of that war program reads as follows:

The Socialist Party of the United States in the present grave crisis solemnly reaffirms its allegiance to the principle of internationalism and working-class solidarity the world over, and proclaims its unalterable opposition to the war just declared by the Government of the United States.

This program further contains the following expression:

We therefore call upon the workers of all countries to refuse support to Governments in their capitalistic wars.

In support of capitalism we will not give a single life or a single dollar; in support of the struggle of the workers for freedom we pledge our all.

The forces of capitalism which have led to the war in Europe are even more hideously transparent in the war recently provoked by the ruling class of this country.

It is not a war against the militarist régime of the Central Powers.

The working class of the United States has no quarrel with the working class of Germany or of any other country. The people of the United States have no quarrel with the people of Germany or of any other country. The American people did not want and do not want this war. They have not been consulted about the war and have had no part in declaring the war. They have been plunged into this war by the trickery and treachery of the ruling class of the country through its representatives in the National Congress, in demagogic agitators, its subsidized press, and other servile instruments of public expression.

We brand the declaration of war by our Government as a crime of our capitalist class against the people of the United States and against the nations of the world.

No greater disbonor has ever been forced upon a people than that which the capitalist class is forcing upon this Nation against its will.

The so-called war program concludes as follows:

We recommend to the workers and pledge ourselves to the following course of action:

1. Continuous active and public opposition to all capitalistic wars, through demonstrations, mass petitions, and all other honorable and effective means within our power.

In publishing the national Socialist platform in his own paper, the Milwaukee Leader, Berger quoted the same, in part, as follows:

Unyielding opposition to all proposed legislation for military or industrial conscription. Should such conscription be forced upon the people, we pledge ourselves to continuous efforts for the repeal of such laws and to the support of all mass movements in opposition to conscription. We pledge ourselves to fight with all our strength against any attempt to raise money for the payment of our war expenses by taxing the necessaries of life or issuing bonds.

We recommend that the convention instruct our elective representatives in Congress and in the State legislatures and in local bodies to vote against all proposed appropriations or loans for military, naval, and other war purposes.

Berger testified that the said national Socialist convention adopted both a war program and a platform.

The selective-service or so-called draft act was passed May 17, 1917; the espionage act on June 5, 1917.

The latter act, among other things, provided that it should constitute an offense against the United States to "willfully make or convey false reports or statements with intent to interfere with the operation or success of the military or naval forces of the United States, or to promote the success of its enemies and whoever, when the United States is at war, shall willfully cause, or attempt to cause, insubordination, disloyalty, mutiny, or refusal of duty in the military or naval forces of the United States, or shall willfully obstruct the recruiting or enlistment service of the United States, to the injury of the service of the United States, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000 or imprisonment for not more than 20 years, or both." The same act also provides for cases of conspiracy to violate such provisions, and makes such conspiracy an offense. It was for violaton of this act that Berger was found guilty by the United States district court sitting at Chicago.

On May 8, 1917, in an issue of the Milwaukee Leader, Berger again reaffirms the declared principles of the said Socialist platform, and continues, from time to time thereafter, throughout the period of the war and after the passage of the said acts, to affirm and reassert such principles.

As late as March 26, 1918, we find him advocating and urging, in an address at Milwaukee, Wis., the following:

It is high time for us to quit fighting. If we quit, the Germans will have no one to fight with and then there will be peace. The only war that we Socialists want is a war against the present Government; and fight against it from every point in which the present European war is connected.

This is the same character of propaganda that Germany employed in breaking down the resistance of the Russian armies and completely destroying them, when they could not be destroyed in battle. And in this way the Germans were able to release and hurl their armies from the eastern front against the Allies on the western front, thereby nearly winning the war.

On March 30, 1918, in another address we find him asserting—

You know, of course, that this war originated as a war for world supremacy between England and Germany.

And also the following:

They claim that we are yellow, that we are afraid, that we are cowardly, because we are against this war. Ladies and gentlemen, it takes a great deal more courage to be against the war then to holler with the mob for war, especially when we know that there are secret service agents in the crowd, as I know there are here; especially when the papers—the press—will print the next day just what suits them.

That message will go out—that message will also go to England, to France, and in France our party is so strong that the party may go over the top any day, and then France will be out of the war—that message will get to Russia and give the Bolsheviki courage.

The evidence contains a world of most damaging and treasonable utterances and expressions on the part of Victor L. Berger, but the few extracts that have been given will indicate the attitude of this man against the United States, when it was at war for its life and existence, and against the Constitution and Government which he had sworn to uphold, but which he sought, by every means at his command, to overthrow and destroy.

In his argument in the House of Representatives in defense of himself and his attitude toward his adopted country, he stated:

I can take back nothing from what I said in my speeches and in my articles. Under the same circumstances I would say and write it all over again, only I would make it a great deal stronger, because I have been justified by the events since the armistice was concluded and the war practically ended.

If the Government of the United States is to be preserved, and life, liberty, and happiness under this Republic be perpetuated, there can never be a place in the Halls of Congress for a man like Victor L. Berger.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. LEONIDAS D. ROBINSON,

OF NORTH CAROLINA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, November 10, 1919.

Mr. ROBINSON of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, on account of the lateness of the hour and the extent to which the resolution in the case of Victor L. Berger has been discussed on the floor of this House, I had concluded not to burden the Members of the House by the expression of my views on this case. I am a member of the committee to which this case was referred, and if I should remain silent I fear that fact might be construed by some that I am not in full accord with the action of the committee.

It has been contended by one Member on this floor that the proper procedure in this case would have been to have sworn in Mr. Berger as a Member of this House by reason of the fact that he held the certificate of election as a Member from the fifth congressional district of Wisconsin, issued to him by the secretary of state, and in the event that the House should find him disqualified he should be expelled as being unworthy of membership.

In my opinion this position is not sustained by precedent.

The evidence in this case discloses the fact that the acts of Mr. Berger which were the basis of the indictment for violation of the espionage act, as appears in the record of the case of the United States against Victor L. Berger and others, which was tried at Chicago in the United States District Court of the Northern District of Illinois in December, 1918, and January, 1919, and other acts upon which the resolutions in this case were based, were committed prior to his election in November, 1918. The counsel for Representative elect Berger took the same position before the committee as that taken by one Member of this House.

It is fully shown in the report in this case that since the foundation of the Government neither the Senate nor the House has ever expelled a Member for acts committed previous to his election.

Speaker CANNON, in the Fifty-eighth Congress, rendered an exhaustive opinion, which, to my mind, covers this phase of the question. On April 26, 1904, Mr. Cochran, of New York, claimed recognition for a question of privilege on a resolution to investigate certain charges made against him by Mr. Dalzell, of Pennsylvania. Speaker CANNON, in his decision holding that the resolution was not privileged, reviewed the cases where both the House and the Senate had consistently refused to expel or punish a Member for an offense alleged to have been committed prior to the date of his election. He referred especially to the decision of Speaker Carlisle in the case of William Pitt Kellogg, of Louisiana, charged with conspiracy in the star-route frauds, in which the distinguished Speaker said:

The House has no right to punish a Member for an offense alleged to have been committed prior to the time when he was elected a Member of the House. That has been so frequently decided in the House that it is no longer a matter of dispute. (Hinds' Precedents, vol. 3, p. 1159.)

This House followed the only course open to it to exclude a disqualified Member.

Counsel for Mr. Berger before the committee vigorously contended that the House of Representatives has no right to add to the qualifications of membership to the House prescribed by the Constitution of the United States, Article I, section 2, and that, therefore, if a Member elect, who is 25 years of age, has been 7 years a citizen of the United States, and is an inhabitant of the State in which he was chosen, presents himself with a certificate from the governor of his State, showing that he was properly elected, the House has no right to exclude him for any cause whatever. It was contended by the counsel for Mr. Berger that section 3 of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States had been repealed by an act of Congress passed in 1898, which provided as follows:

That the disability imposed by section 3 of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States heretofore incurred is hereby removed. (U. S. Stat. L., vol. 30, ch. 389, p. 432.)

I can not believe that any lawyer will seriously contend that Congress has the power to repeal a provision of the Constitution by a mere statute, or that any portion of the Constitution can be repealed except in the manner prescribed by the Constitution itself. While under the provision of section 3 of the fourteenth amendment Congress was given the power by two-thirds vote of each House to remove disability incurred, under this section it could only remove disability incurred prior to the passage of the act, that Congress would not have the power to remove any future disability. This is plainly recognized in the words "heretofore incurred," placed in the act itself.

A fourth qualification is prescribed by the Constitution for a Senator or Representative in Congress by section 3 of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution, which provides as follows:

No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress who, having previously taken an oath as a Member of Congress or as an officer of the United States or as a member of any State legislature or as an executive or judicial officer of any State to support the Constitution of the United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof. But Congress may, by a vote of two-thirds of each House, remove such disability.

It was conclusively proven, in fact Mr. Berger admitted, that he held several positions of trust in the State of Wisconsin and served as a Member of this House from March 4, 1911, to March 4, 1913, as a Representative from the fifth congressional district of Wisconsin, and that he took the usual oath of a Member of Congress to support the Constitution of the United States.

The espionage act provides as follows:

Whoever, when the United States is at war, shall—

(1) Willfully make or convey false reports or false statements with intent to interfere with the operation or success of the military or naval forces of the United States or to promote the success of its enemies, and

(2) Whoever, when the United States is at war, shall willfully cause or attempt to cause insubordination, disloyalty, mutiny, or refusal of duty in the military or naval forces of the United States, or

(3) Shall willfully obstruct the recruiting or enlistment service of the United States to the injury of the service or of the United States shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000 or imprisonment for not more than 20 years, or both.

This act has been declared constitutional by the Supreme Court of the United States. The purpose of the act was to prevent persons from obstructing and embarrassing the Government in the prosecution of the war; and the evidence in this case conclusively proves that Victor L. Berger, from the time of the outbreak of the war until his indictment by the Federal grand jury, did willfully hinder, obstruct, and embarrass the Government of the United States in violation of the espionage act, and did give aid and comfort to its enemies in violation of the Constitution of the United States, which acts make him ineligible to sit as a Member in this House.

In my opinion no impartial Member of this House, after reading the evidence in this proceeding, can reach any conclusion other than that arrived at by your committee.

Diplomatic relations between the United States and Germany were broken off on February 3, 1917. In March, 1917, President Wilson issued his proclamation calling a special session of Congress, which on April 6, 1917, passed a joint resolution declaring the existence of a state of war between this country and the Imperial German Government.

On April 7, 1917, on the call of the executive committee of the Socialist Party, of which Victor L. Berger was one of the five members, there was convened in St. Louis an emergency national convention of the Socialist Party, at which Victor L. Berger and the other four members of the executive committee were present; and a proclamation and war program was adopted by the majority of the members of said convention, a copy of which will be found on page 117 of volume 2 of the printed hearings in this case. Ex-President Roosevelt characterized the act of this convention as "treason to the United States."

Among other statements in this proclamation and war program occur the following:

The American people did not want and do not want this war. They have not been consulted about the war and have had no part in declaring war. They have been plunged into this war by the trickery and treachery of the ruling class of the country through its representatives in the national administration and National Congress, its demagogic agitators, its subsidized press, and other servile instruments of public expression.

We brand the declaration of war by our Government as a crime against the people of the United States and against the nations of the world.

In all modern history there has been no war more unjustifiable than the war in which we are about to engage.

No greater dishonor has ever been forced upon a people than that which the capitalist class is forcing upon this Nation against its will.

* * * * * * *

We recommend to the workers and pledge ourselves to the following course of action:

Continuous, active, and public opposition to the war through demonstrations, mass petitions, and all other means within our power.

Unyielding opposition to all proposed legislation for military or industrial conscription. Should such conscription be forced upon the people, we pledge ourselves to continuous efforts for the repeal of such laws and to the support of all mass movements in opposition to conscription. We pledge ourselves to oppose with all our strength any attempt to raise money for payment of war expense by taxing the necessaries of life or issuing bonds which will put the burden upon future generations.

This proclamation and war program, which was signed by Victor L. Berger, was published in the Milwaukee Leader, of which Mr. Berger is editor and for which he assumes responsibility, and was printed and distributed in pamphlet form throughout the country during the period from April to October, 1917, to the extent of over a million copies.

Under the title "Women in war," published in the American Socialist on April 14, 1917, title to which was in the national executive committee, of which Victor L. Berger is the moving spirit, it says:

A kindly, learned gentleman of "Old Virginia" saw two women trying to induce a young lad to enlist. "I don't very often feel like hitting women with a baseball bat," he said in relating the incident, "but I did then." He was an ex-Confederate veteran.

He knew what war was. An ardent pacifist, the action of the women seemed despicable in his eyes.

And the action was despicable. Women soliciting for such a purpose are only a step higher than women who solicit for the sale of their bodies; and, in fact, the latter deserve only the deepest compassion, while the former are entitled only to contempt. Such women are unworthy of their sex.

"Lips that touch liquor shall never touch mine" is the burden of an old temperance song. "Hands that hold guns shall never hold mine" should be the new version.

Sentimental? Yes; but sensible nevertheless. It would work.

This is a vile slander of the liberty-loving, patriotic women of this land, and the courageous, loyal Confederate veteran who willingly gave his sons and his all to the service of his country and his flag. [Prolonged applause.]

These are only a few of the disloyal acts of Mr. Berger during our late emergency. It would be impossible in the short time allotted to me to call your attention to them all. Mr. Berger assumed full responsibility for all articles in the Milwaukee Leader, copies of which will be found on pages 514 to 530, inclusive, of volume 1 of the printed hearings.

Can any citizen of the United States who is truly American find that Mr. Berger possesses the qualifications required by the Constitution for membership in this House?

The evidence in this case proves conclusively that Mr. Berger's heart was with the country of his birth and the Central Powers during the late emergency, and that he in every way gave aid and comfort to our enemies in violation of the Constitution, which he had sworn to uphold and defend against all enemies, foreign and domestic. He has proven the case against himself by his speech in this House, and he is unworthy of a seat in this body. It would be a travesty upon the American Government and its institutions to permit Victor L. Berger to occupy a seat in the highest lawmaking body in the land. [Applause.]

There is no place in this country for those who desire to avail themselves of the benefits and blessings guaranteed to all men under the Stars and Stripes who are at heart opposed to our ideals and principles which make those benefits and blessings possible. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CLEVELAND NEWTON,

OF MISSOURI,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, November 10, 1919.

On the resolution to refuse a seat in Congress to Victor L. Berger.

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I believe in the principle of representative government. I believe in the right of the people of each district to elect, in an orderly manner, the individual of their choice, who shall act as their Representative in the Congress of the United States, and it is totally immaterial to me as to the politics either of such Representative or of the constituents who elect him.

There is no dispute but what Victor L. Berger at the last election received a majority of the legal votes cast for a Member of Congress in the fifth congressional district of Wisconsin. He has presented to this House a certificate of election issued in due form and has demanded the right to take the oath of office and to occupy a seat, but a Committee on Elections of this House, after a full and exhaustive investigation, has reported that he is not eligible to become a Member of this Congress and has recommended that the House refuse to administer the oath of office to him or permit him to take the seat to which he was elected, not because he is a Socialist, or because he adheres to doctrines to which the committee does not subscribe, but because, as the committee contends, he is not qualified to become a Member of Congress.

I regret exceedingly the situation which the evidence in this case presents, and it is with great reluctance that I shall vote, as I feel myself constrained to do, to refuse a seat to a Representative who at the election was the undoubted choice of the majority of the qualified voters in one of the congressional districts of this country. But in view of the undisputed evidence and in conformity with my oath to support the Constitution of the United States, I can not see how I can do otherwise.

Paragraph 3 of Article XIV of the amendments to the Constitution of the United States provides as follows:

No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress * * * who, having previously taken an oath as a Member of Congress * * * to support the Constitution of the United States * * * shall have * * * given aid and comfort to the enemies thereof.

The evidence shows that Mr. Berger was a Member of the Sixty-second Congress of the United States, and that he at that time took an oath to support the Constitution of the United States. On April 6, 1917, this country declared war on the Central Powers of Europe. The evidence shows that at that time Victor L. Berger was one of five members of the executive committee of the Socialist Party of the United States; that upon the call of this executive committee the Socialist Party convened in an emergency national convention at St. Louis, Mo., on April 7, 1917, and that with his cooperation and approval, and in a large measure through his influence, that convention issued a "proclamation and war program," from which the following are extracts:

The American people have been plunged into this war by the trickery and treachery of the ruling class of the country through its representatives in the national administration and the National Congress, its demagogic agitators, its subsidized press, and other servile instruments of public expression.

We brand the declaration of war by our Government as a crime against the people of the United States and against the nations of the world.

In all modern history there has been no war more unjustifiable than the war in which we are about to engage.

We recommend to the workers and pledge ourselves to the following course of action: Continuous, active, and public opposition to the war through demonstration, mass petitions, and all other means within our power.

We pledge ourselves to oppose with all our strength any attempt to raise money for payment of war expenses by taxing the necessaries of life or issuing bonds which will put the burden upon future generations.

The undisputed evidence shows that the Milwaukee Leader, of which Mr. Berger has been editor since 1911, published this "proclamation and war program" over the signature of Victor L. Berger, and that he assisted in having a million copies of such "proclamation and war program" printed in pamphlet form and distributed throughout the United States between April and October, 1917.

Mr. Berger did not contend in his speech before the House, and, indeed, I do not believe that he or his most extreme partisan would attempt to contend that a "proclamation and war program," containing the language above set out, adopted by a great political party in the United States, declaring that it would continually, actively, and publicly, by every means within its power, oppose the war in which this country was engaged, and would oppose with all its strength any attempt to raise money for the payment of war expenses, was calculated to aid this Government; and I do not believe that they would contend that the publication of such a proclamation in the leading paper of that political party, and the distribution of a million copies of such proclamation, was not calculated to and did not in fact give aid and comfort to the enemies of the United States in the time of the Nation's peril, and at a time when every American, whether he believed in the war or not, should at least have refrained from giving comfort and encouragement to the nations with which this country was at war.

The record in this case abounds in evidence similar to that above set out, and shows conclusively that Mr. Berger by his free and voluntary acts has violated the plain provisions of the Constitution and has thereby rendered himself ineligible as a Representative in Congress.

Americanism Against Internationalism.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. IRA G. HERSEY,

OF MAINE,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, November 10, 1919,

On House resolution No. 61, as follows:

"Resolved, That under the facts and circumstances of this case, Victor L. Berger is not entitled to take the oath of office as a Representative in this House from the fifth congressional district of the State of Wisconsin or to hold a seat therein as such Representative."

Mr. HERSEY. Mr. Speaker, Victor L. Berger was born in Germany in 1860. He was well educated in German schools and then came as an immigrant to the United States. While living in the State of Wisconsin he applied for naturalization and was admitted a citizen. He at that time took an oath to support and maintain the Constitution of the United States and to defend it against all its enemies, foreign and domestic, and he then and there renounced all allegiance and fidelity to all foreign powers, particularly the Government of Germany.

After becoming, in name only, an American citizen he announced himself a Socialist, and for many years edited and published a great many German Socialist newspapers and magazines. He was a pioneer organizer of the Socialist Party in America and was a delegate to the convention in 1897 that nominated for President Eugene V. Debs. At the same time he was secretary for the United States of the international socialist bureau in Germany. He ran as a socialist candidate for mayor of Milwaukee, and in 1910 was elected to the Sixty-second Congress of the United States as a Socialist. At the organization of the Sixty-second Congress he appeared and again took the oath to support the Constitution of the United States. During his term in Congress he supported all socialistic schemes and defended socialism as opposed to the views of the Republican or Democratic Parties. He was defeated for reelection and went back to his old work of publishing socialistic literature and extending the Socialist Party in America. He soon became the head of the Socialist Party, with headquarters in Milwaukee.

On the 6th day of April, 1917, the United States declared war against Germany. On the next day after this country had declared war a national convention of the Socialists met at St. Louis, and a committee was appointed to draft a platform expressing the views of the convention on war and militarism, and Berger was the moving spirit and head of the convention.

John Spargo, a prominent Socialist and delegate from Vermont, attempted to have the convention report a resolution as follows:

Now that the war is an accomplished fact, for the reason stated we hold that it is our socialist duty to make whatever sacrifices may be necessary to enable our Nation and its allies to win the war as speedily as possible.

This was voted down and the following resolution, supported by Berger, was adopted:

We brand the declaration of war by our Government as a crime against the people of the United States and against the nations of the world. They—have been plunged into this war by the trickery and treachery of the ruling class of the country through its representatives in the national administration and National Congress.

Referring to the people—

After this convention Berger, by means of his socialist publications and his own home paper, the Milwaukee Sentinel, owned and edited by him, did everything possible to discourage the war, condemn the draft, and lend aid and comfort and assistance to Germany. It is a long story, during the period of the war, of secret plottings on his part against his Government, of open defiance of the Constitution of the United States, of conspiracies to assist Germany in winning the war, of treasonable utterances against the flag that he had sworn to support, until our Government was forced to arrest him and place him on trial on the charge of treason against the Government.

That trial consumed many weeks. The testimony, which is very voluminous, is before us, and a careful reading must convince any fair-minded person that no one could be more guilty than Berger as a foe of the United States, its laws and its institutions.

After a long and an impartial trial he was convicted and sentenced to 20 years in Atlanta Penitentiary. He took an appeal, which is now pending, and gave bail to the amount of $125,000, which in the meantime has given him his liberty to conduct his newspapers and continue to promulgate his anarchistic ideas.

While under this serious charge by the Government, he was nominated and elected to the Sixty-sixth Congress from the fifth Wisconsin district as a Socialist in a triangular fight between the Socialist, Democratic, and Republican Parties, and he now presents himself to this Congress, claiming his right to sit here as a Member.

The fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States says:

No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or elector of President and Vice President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States or under any State, who, having previously taken an oath as a Member of Congress, or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any State legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any State, to support the Constitution of the United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof. But Congress may, by a vote of two-thirds of each House, remove such disability.

The evidence clearly shows that Victor Berger is disqualified under the Constitution to remain longer a Member of this House.

The report of the Elections Committee in this Congress which investigated this case contains exhaustive hearings and makes up two large volumes, and a reading of which will convince you that if Victor Berger has not sinned against his Government, then there can be no such thing as treason, and no one could be a foe to his country under any circumstances.

There is a crisis in this land. The enemies of the Nation, composed largely of foreigners, socialists of the Berger stamp, Bolshevists, and anarchists, are urging revolution through the ignorant and criminal classes. Labor is urged to rise and burn and slay. The literature seized last week by the Department of Justice discloses the purposes of the Berger followers. The following is an extract from their propaganda sowed broadcast over the Nation:

The direct purpose of the struggle will be social revolution and the program of the day will be the destruction of private ownership in all the means of production. But communism in the economic field must inevitably be crowned with anarchy in the field of politics. Therefore, along with the complete destruction of private ownership must go complete destruction of the state.

DREAM OF GODLESS NATION.

The manifesto says its members are atheists, communists, and anarchists, and adds:

"Beyond the blood-covered barricades, beyond all terrors of civil war, there already shines for us the magnificent, beautiful form of man without a God, without a master, and free of authority."

Through the courtesy of this House Berger has been permitted for an hour and a half to make his defense before us, and during that time he has abused the courtesy of the House by denouncing Members of Congress, heaping upon them epithets, calling them "rubber stamps," and at the same time denouncing as criminal and dishonest the jury that tried him and the court that sentenced him. His speech, published in the RECORD, is sufficient evidence of his unfitness to be a Member of Congress or to be at large in the Nation.

It is but a step from Berger's socialism to Russian Bolshevism, and Berger has taken that fatal step. The line is very dim between Bolshevism and anarchy, and Berger has crossed that line never to return. Congress, which, under the Constitution, is the sole judge of its membership, must purge itself from the foes of the Republic and against those who violate its laws and defy its Constitution. I shall vote to deny Victor Berger a seat in this House.

OF

HON. ALVAN T. FULLER,

OF MASSACHUSETTS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, November 10, 1919.

On the following resolution:

"Resolved, That under the facts and circumstances of this case Victor L. Berger is not entitled to take the oath of office as a Representative in this House from the fifth congressional district of the State of Wisconsin or to hold a seat therein as such Representative."

Mr. FULLER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, in view of the findings of fact embodied in the report of the special committee of nine Members of the House of Representatives appointed under House resolution No. 6 to hear the testimony in this case, I shall vote to support the resolution and to exclude Victor L. Berger from the House, not because he has been convicted in the United States court for violating the espionage act or that he is now under sentence and is headed for prison unless the appellate court grants him release, but on the ground that he is un-American, was guilty of disloyalty during the war, was an enemy to the United States of America, gave aid and comfort to the enemy, and was guilty in thought, act, and deed of treason against the United States. Therefore it would seem to me that Berger does not merit the protection of the laws which he flouts, and for him to aspire to make the laws which he so contemptuously defies is the height of effrontery.

Berger characterizes the action of the House as a "crucifixion," and in a manner of speaking it is. It is the crucifixion of disloyalty, the nailing of sedition to the cross of free government, where the whole brood of anarchists, Bolshevists, I. W. W.'s, and revolutionaries may see and read a solemn warning. It is the same sort of crucifixion which sent Debs and Big Bill Haywood behind the bars, which suppressed Berkman and Emma Goldman, and which has brought the hand of the law down upon a host of Reds who have plotted the destruction of the Government of the United States in the hope of substituting the rule of anarchy.

William Hohenzollern, late de facto head of one of the most widely known European empires and who for years was considered an astute and highly intelligent person, demonstrated his innate stupidity when he gave credence to the report of one Bernstorff that America would not fight. The red scum of Europe are committing the same stupidity by assuming that they can spread their propaganda in the United States without hindrance. The American people and their forbears have paid too dearly for their Government to see it thrown to the wolves of anarchy.

Briefly, the facts are these:

At the election held in the fifth congressional district of the State of Wisconsin on November 5, 1918, Victor L. Berger, who was the Socialist candidate, received 17,920 votes; Joseph P. Carney, who was the Democratic candidate, received 12,450 votes; and William H. Stafford, who was the Republican candidate, received 10,678 votes. No question is raised in this case as to the regularity of the election or the correctness of the election returns.

Victor L. Berger was born in Austria in 1860, and came to this country in 1878, settling in Bridgeport, Conn. In 1881 he went to Milwaukee, where he taught school until 1890, when he became editor of the German socialist paper, Vorwaerts. In 1898 he started a weekly paper known as the Milwaukee Social Democrat, called later the Social Democratic Herald. In 1911 he started the Milwaukee Leader, which was at first a weekly and later became a daily paper, of which he has been the editor ever since. In 1910 he was elected as a Socialist to the Sixty-second Congress from the fifth district of the State of Wisconsin, taking the usual oath of a Member of Congress to support the Constitution of the United States, and serving from March 4, 1911, to March 4, 1913.

On October 3, 1917, the second-class mailing privilege of the Milwaukee Leader, of which Victor L. Berger was editor in chief, and for the publication of which he was responsible, was revoked by the Postmaster General of the United States for a violation of the provisions of sections 1 and 2 of title 12 of the act of June 15, 1917, commonly known as the espionage act. This action was taken as a result of the publication of a series of articles evidently printed in a spirit of hostility to our Government and with the apparent purpose of hindering and embarrassing the Government in the prosecution of the war.

On February 2, 1918, Victor L. Berger, together with Adolph Germer, J. Louis Engdahl, William F. Kruse, and Irwin St. John Tucker, were indicted by the grand jury in the district court of the United States for the northern district of Illinois for a violation of sections 3 and 4 of title 7 of the espionage act.

Both of the above facts, as well as the continued activities of the contestee, both as a member of the national executive committee of the Socialist Party and as editor in chief of the Milwaukee Leader, were well known to the voters of the fifth congressional district of the State of Wisconsin at the election held on November 5, 1918.

Subsequent to the election Victor L. Berger and his codefendants were tried before Judge Landis and a Federal jury at Chicago, and on January 8, 1919, were found guilty as charged in the indictment. On February 20, 1919, the contestee was sentenced to 20 years imprisonment in the Federal prison at Leavenworth, Kans. An appeal was taken to the United States circuit court of appeals for the seventh district, which appeal is now pending.

After careful consideration of all the evidence introduced at the Chicago trial, in addition to the testimony submitted to the committee, the Committee on Elections No. 1 of the House has rightly, in my humble opinion, concurred with the opinion of the special committee appointed under House resolution No 6. that Victor L. Berger did obstruct, hinder, and embarrass the Government of the United States in the prosecution of the war, and did give aid and comfort to its enemies.

On April 7, 1917, the very day after this country declared war, an emergency convention of the Socialist Party was held at St. Louis on the call of Victor L. Berger, at that time a member of the national executive committee of the Socialist Party. At this convention a "proclamation and war program" was adopted which the late ex-President Roosevelt characterized in a letter to Congressman GOLDFOGLE, representing the twelfth congressional district of the State of New York, as "treason to the United States." The letter, which stamps the acts of men who counseled unyielding opposition and vigorous resistance to the Government during the war as moral treason, reads:

THE KANSAS CITY STAR,
OFFICE OF THEODORE ROOSEVELT,
NEW YORK OFFICE, 347 MADISON AVENUE.
October 16, 1918.

MY DEAR MR. GOLDFOGLE: I am exceedingly glad that the Republicans have indorsed your nomination for Congress in the twelfth New York congressional district. The nationalist Socialist Party platform adopted at St. Louis in 1917, after we had entered the war, and reaffirmed at Chicago in August last, contains the following planks:

"We brand the declaration of war by our Government as a crime against the people of the United States and against the nations of the world.

"In all modern history there has been no war more unjustifiable than the war in which we are about to engage.

"No greater dishonor has ever been forced upon a people than that which the capitalist class is forcing upon this Nation against its will.

"We pledge ourselves to continuous, active, and public opposition to the war through demonstrations, mass petitions, and all other means within our power; to unyielding opposition to all proposed legislation for military or industrial conscription and to continuous efforts to repeal such laws; to opposing with all our strength any attempt to raise money for payment of war expenses by taxing the necessaries of life or issuing bonds which will put the burden on future generations."

All this is at least moral treason to the United States.

You are standing on a platform of 100 per cent Americanism, and by your actions you have shown that your devotion to this platform is genuine and sincere. I very earnestly wish you success in your contest.

Faithfully, yours,

(Signed) THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

Mr. DALLINGER, of Massachusetts, has referred to an article entitled "Woman and war," printed in the American Socialist on April 14, 1917, title to which was in the national executive committee, of which Victor L. Berger was the moving spirit, the article having reference to the women of the country who encouraged young men to join the colors and fight for their country. I want to read you part of that article: It says:

A kindly, learned gentleman of "Old Virginia" saw two women trying to induce a young lad to enlist. "I don't very often feel like hitting women with a baseball bat," he said in relating the incident, "but I did then." And the action was despicable. Women soliciting for such a purpose are only a step higher than women who solicit for the sale of their bodies, and, in fact, the latter deserve only deepest compassion while the former are entitled only to contempt. Such women are unworthy of their sex.

I can not but feel that such a slander upon the noble womanhood of America can best be repudiated by refusing Victor Berger a seat in this House.

While our boys in khaki were fighting and making the supreme sacrifice for their country, Victor Berger was stabbing in the back every soldier who enlisted in our country's cause. The speech he made on the floor of this House to-day alone is enough to condemn him in the mind of every fair-thinking American citizen. His own words prove that he was disloyal all during the war and that right now he is an enemy to America. No man who utters such sentiments is fit to be a Member of Congress.

Victor Berger calls the espionage law infamous. Congress passed that law to keep down such enemies within as he. Berger defied the law, and as a result is to-day under a sentence of 20 years in the penitentiary. His audacity on this floor in his speech of to-day is an insult to all true Americans. He stated that "Abraham Lincoln waged a war of four years infinitely more dangerous to our country and to the Union without any infamous law like the espionage act." What reply to this assertion could be a more fitting climax to this debate than Lincoln's own wonderful words in his letter to Erastus Corning apropos of Vallandigham, the disloyal governor of Ohio, who, on account of his sympathies for the southern cause, Lincoln ordered deported into the Confederate States:

Mr. Vallandigham avows his hostility to the war on the part of the Union and his arrest was made because he was laboring with some effect to prevent the raising of troops, to encourage desertions from the Army.

He who dissuades one man from volunteering, or induces one soldier to desert, weakens the Union cause as much as he who kills a Union soldier in battle.

Must I shoot a simple-minded soldier boy who deserts, while I must not touch a hair of a wily agitator who induces him to desert? This is none the less injurious when effected by getting a father, or brother, or friend into a public meeting, and there working upon his feelings till he is persuaded to write the soldier boy that he is fighting in a bad cause, for a wicked administration of a contemptible Government, too weak to arrest and punish him if he shall desert. I think that, in such a case, to silence the agitator and save the boy is not only constitutional, but withal a great mercy.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM W. LARSEN.

OF GEORGIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, November 14, 1919.

Mr. LARSEN. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, in these days of turmoil and discord, with their problems of decreased production, high cost of living, and controversies between labor and capital, so seriously jeopardizing the well-being and happiness of an unoffending public, it should be comforting to know that there is, at least, one place in the United States where the people are endeavoring to produce something more than trouble for others.

I would direct your attention to Georgia, and especially to its rapidly changing agricultural and live-stock conditions, in which lines persistent scientific efforts have in recent years wrought much for the public good. Until recently Georgia, like most other Southern States, was regarded as a one-crop-producing section, but within the last decade—yes, within the last five or six years—intelligent diversification in agricultural lines and the raising of live stock on a more extensive basis has demonstrated that the State will produce almost anything except Bolshevism and the other "isms" which destroy the liberties of the people.

A more comprehensive idea of its agricultural potentialities may be gained by a brief consideration of its products and comparative rank with other States of the Union. In estimating the 13 leading agricultural products, produced in the various States, the Census Department ranks Illinois first and Georgia second.

Georgia produces more cotton than any other State in the Union except Texas, but an analysis of the situation will, I think, convince any reasonable mind that of the two Georgia is the better cotton-producing State, for Texas, with more than four times the area and twice the average acreage planted in cotton, produces only about 20 per cent more than Georgia.

The annual production of corn, wheat, oats, and other such farm products is extensive and continually on the increase. Considerable tobacco is being produced, and perhaps in no section has the recent percentage of increased acreage exceeded that of Georgia. Fruit is also raised upon a large scale. It produces more than twice as many peaches as any other State except California. Fort Valley, Houston County, Ga., is one of the greatest peach centers of the world, and nowhere can a peach be found that exceeds in flavor or commands better prices than those produced in that section.

I will only speak of its agricultural advancements in a passive way, but desire to emphasize its live-stock industry. For two years preceding our entry into the World War much labor was allured from this section into the Northern States on account of higher wages offered as a result of war activities in Europe. Our own entry into the war at a later date took a very large portion of that remaining. Notwithstanding these conditions, the agricultural production of the State within the last five years has increased in amount at least 25 per cent. Live stock, particularly cattle and hogs, for the same period has increased more than 50 per cent in number and 125 per cent in value per head. This increased value is not only attributable to war conditions, but also to increased attention and introduction of purer bred herds.

The increased production in live stock has introduced into the State packing plants of considerable importance, which until recently were unknown in that section. Swift & Co. and other large packers now have both killing and curing plants in Georgia and are greatly extending such operations.

In almost every county in Georgia there are several herds of pure-bred cattle, among which are represented all of the leading breeds of America. Since 1913 in only three States has the percentage of increase in production of hogs equaled or exceeded that of Georgia, and neither of these States exceed or even closely approximate Georgia in production. When we consider that the United States is the largest swine-producing country in the world the record made is all the more commendable. While interest in stock raising in this section has for several years been on the increase, it is particularly within the last half decade that the advancement has been so marked.

There is located in the twelfth district of Georgia, which I have the honor to represent, a county called Bleckley, in honor of one of the greatest jurists this country has produced. It is known as one of the new counties of Georgia, having been created by act of the general assembly of that State about 10 years ago. It is situated on the main line of the Southern Railway. I am sure if the public understood normal conditions in that section as some of us do, it would not be surprising to anyone that the Southern Railroad is one of the few that is self-sustaining under Government operation.

The county is small in area, but, from an agricultural standpoint, it is considered one of the best in Georgia. I do not desire to create the impression that the county is without its financial problems and perplexities. Such is not the case, for it is located in the heart of the cotton belt, and the devastation to the cotton crop in that section on account of boll weevil is so great that the Government estimate is only 20 per cent of a normal crop for the county, and for this reason it will sustain a loss of about $2.000,000 for the present year. Notwithstanding this fact, the county, by reason of its live-stock industry, is not in as bad shape as one might suppose. Nor are its citizens disheartened, for they have with profit demonstrated what thoughtful and reflected men have long realized—that Georgia is as well, if not better, adapted to the raising of live stock than any other section of the United States.

There are in this county, as is also true of most others of the State, several herds of pure-bred cows which would do credit to any section, but as it is not especially noted for raising cattle, we will not dwell upon that subject.

Realizing that it was only a question of time when such crop devastation as now exists might be expected, its progressive citizens, some 8 or 10 years ago, set to work to prepare for such an emergency. Within an incredibly short time Bleckley County has not only become the banner hog county of Georgia but it has gained a national reputation, and in one respect, at least, world-wide recognition, in that it is the home of Orien Cherry King, jr., the champion Duroc Jersey boar of the world. This title he holds and won at the first national swine show at Omaha, Nebr., said to be the greatest show of the kind ever staged. The boar is owned by Messrs. Peacock & Hodge, of Cochran, Ga. One of the owners, Mr. W. H. Peacock, if my memory serves me right, is vice president of the National Duroc Jersey Association of America and is president of the Georgia Swine Growers' Association.

Bleckley County recently held a swine show at which were exhibited only Bleckley County hogs, all of the leading breeds being on exhibition. It attracted much attention throughout the country. Those who attended say it was a great success and would have done credit to a State show, much more to a county exhibit. The Girls' Pig Club and the Boys' Pig Club were each represented and showed that these youngsters are destined to become leaders in matters along this line.

At the recent Georgia State Fair an exhibition open to all of the more than 150 counties of the State and in which most of them participated, Bleckley County exhibitors were awarded on hogs shown by them 74 prizes, among which were 19 first, 5 junior champions, 4 grand champions, and 2 senior champions. Willis Collum, a member of the Bleckley County Boys' Pig Club, was among those winning first prize.

There has been held at Cochran, the county seat, during the present year two swine sales, both of which attracted national attention. They were attended by citizens from many other States and from Cuba, who became purchasers. In all, something like 85 head—45 Duroc Jerseys and 40 Hampshires—were sold. There was realized from the sale over $50,000. Individual hogs of each breed sold as high as $1,000. The Durocs were bred and sold by Messrs. Peacock & Hodge and the Hampshires by Messrs. Mullis & Patrick, both firms having a national reputation.

Another sale of pure-bred hogs for breeding purposes is scheduled for January 5 to 8, inclusive. It is planned to sell Hampshires on the first day, Poland Chinas on the second, Berkshires on the third, and Duroc Jerseys on the fourth day. Certain hours of each day will be set aside for sale of butcher hogs, and it is expected in this way that several trainloads of such hogs will be sold to various packers throughout the country.

It is safe to say that Bleckley County during the present year has supplied hogs for breeding purposes to at least one-half of the States of the Union. Among them may be mentioned Iowa, Illinois, Missouri, South Dakota, Ohio, and Kentucky, all recognized among the great swine-growing States of the country.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. EVERETTE B. HOWARD,

OF OKLAHOMA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, November 14, 1919.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the committee, all through this measure indications seem to be that the committee have attempted to conserve to the railroads their property intact and place it upon a dividend-earning basis. To-day a majority of the House have amended the bill in a manner in which they believe will extend a greater protection to the rights of organized labor. Contemplating these actions of an evident desire to protect property rights and labor, I do not believe that either the committee or the House would in this bill do an injustice to private property knowingly. Yet, under its provisions there is some strictly private property that can be, and probably would be, confiscated unless the amendment which I am now urging is adopted.

Throughout the country some of the great chemical-manufacturing companies, machinery-manufacturing companies, construction companies, and oil producers and refiners have found it necessary, in order to properly protect and carry on their business, to own, in connection with their factories, private tank cars and cars especially equipped for transporting their products. And it is the property of these people that will be affected unless this amendment is adopted. I feel that all such companies are entitled to the use and enjoyment of their private property, but it is the tank cars of the oil producers and refiners with which I am most familiar and of which I desire to speak.

And in this connection I ask, Why should this bill contain any provision that would warrant any officer of the Government to take over and control this private property? There is no popular demand for nor public interest to be served by subjecting the private oil tank cars to Government control. The contemplated action would amount to such a deprivation of property as to render the statutory provision unconstitutional, and the facts surrounding the ownership and use of these cars do not warrant any such action. Already the refiners and producers who own their tank cars have been put to considerable expense in securing them, the facts being that about two years ago, through the great increase in the demand for the products of crude oil, and by reason of the entry of this country into the Great War, the refiners and many of the producers found it necessary to make these private purchases. The demand for private consumption was great and growing. The war was on, and the Government was demanding and needing great quantities of the products of petroleum. The railroads had broken down; did not have a sufficient supply of tank cars to take care of the business and were without funds with which to secure them. The oil man was brought face to face with the fact that in order to furnish his products to the Government in quantities at a time when the Government was needing it so badly, and also that if he was going to be able to take care of his private business, it was necessary for him, at a great expense to himself, to secure these cars with which to perform this service. It was necessary for him to proceed with his private business, and, above all things, he desired that his Government should not be in any way handicapped in its fight to make the world safe for democracy. Consequently, without hesitation, he went into the market and supplied himself with these cars at abnormally high prices. In fact, previous to the war these cars could be purchased from $900 to $1,250 each, but, owing to the condition of the war when the refiners and oil men found it necessary to purchase these cars, they paid for them a price ranging around $3,750 per car. The investment in these cars created no return to him by way of direct earnings or profits. The sole advantage arising from the ownership consisted in the facilities thus afforded for prompt marketing and delivery of oil and refined products. These cars are not offered to nor used by the public or by other operators. They form a part of the equipment of a distinctly private enterprise, and are not used in common carriage nor for the transportation of food. They are strictly a piece of private property used in carrying on a private business. They have no connection with public service with the exception of the fact that they are so constructed as to run on the rails of the railroad. There would be just as much reason in pooling and taking over the private delivery wagons of the grocer or butcher as there would be in pooling and taking over private cars of the refiners or oil producers. The pooling of the privately owned tank cars of this country would mean the confiscation of a class of privately owned property. A property owned not for the purpose of earning dividends but a property which is as necessary to the operation of this private property as is the still or oil tanks which are a part of the construction of the refinery.

It is true that the authority granted the Interstate Commerce Commission in this act is to be exercised only in case of an emergency, but what constitutes an emergency is not defined but is left to the judgment and discretion of the commission. The tank-car owners believe that this will encourage oft-repeated representations to the commission by nonowners to the effect that an emergency has arisen and that tank-car equipment should be pooled or directed for their convenience. Doubtless in a majority of such instances, after a hearing at which the owners would produce the facts, file briefs, and make arguments, the good judgment of the commission would require a dismissal and denial of the requests and representations. But how are the car owners and the public to be compensated and reimbursed for the expense, annoyance, and interruption of business resulting from these repeated hearings, the consequent clogging of the commission's docket, the necessary increase of the army of advocates, statisticians, and experts, and representatives required to attend such hearings? And why should the owner of strictly private property be called upon to make such showing in order to retain within himself his privately owned property? As a matter of fact, I doubt that if ever a real emergency making it necessary that these cars be pooled could or will exist. Yet, as I just said, if this measure is passed without my amendment there will no doubt be continuous attempts by those who do not own their cars to bring forward an emergency. The greatest emergency that has ever occurred in the history of the country, and perhaps ever will occur, took place during the recent war. There was then agitation for such provision as is now suggested in this bill, but it is with pride that the owners of these cars call attention to the fact that without such legislation the oil industry itself took care of the situation through the cooperation of the private tank-car owners, so that the service rendered by the oil industry during that period stands as a monument to the efficiency and patriotism of its members. If the tremendous problems of the war did not require the action now contemplated, how much less likely is it to be required in times of peace.

Aside from all this, however, Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that a provision of this bill which would permit the taking of this private property would be constitutional. A leading case upon this subject is that of Munn against Illinois (94 U. S., 113). This case marked the limit to which the courts are willing to go in approving control of private property by the Government. The constitutional inhibition against the deprivation of property without due process of law is as binding an injunction against the Federal Government as stated in the fifth amendment as it is against the States as stated in the fourteenth amendment. As recognized in the Munn case and its successors, property may be controlled when (1) it is devoted to public use; (2) when the business enjoys a real or virtual monopoly; (3) when some public franchise or special privilege is granted. Mr. Chairman, privately owned tank cars are not devoted to public use. They are not held out as carriers for the public. They are utilized merely as an instrumentality for performing private contracts for the delivery of the owners' goods. The oil producer or refiner enjoys no monopoly, virtual or otherwise. Each is engaged in a struggle for success enlivened by the keenest, yet friendliest, competition, and, of course, no public franchise or special privilege is enjoyed.

In addition to this, Mr. Chairman, I want to say of the owners of these private tank cars, that no more patriotic citizen lives in America to-day. During the war their every resource was at the command of the Government. They invested millions of dollars in Liberty bonds. When a representative of the Red Cross called at their places of business she was met with a smile, and when she departed she carried in her hand a good-size check. Their purses were always open to the limit to the Young Men's Christian Association, to the Knights of Columbus, and to all war activities. They gave of their fortunes and of their families to their country. And it is with special pride that I call attention to the fact that during the time we were actively engaged in the struggle in France, through the cooperation of the oil producers and refiners each evening during that time there left the city of Tulsa, my home town, three trains of these privately owned tank cars loaded with oil and gasoline destined for the use of our boys in Europe. And now that the war is over and these people have showed their willingness and ability to cooperate with our Government whenever an emergency does arise, I beg of you to pass this amendment, and through it avoid the possibility of the right of anyone to confiscate from them this private property which they have purchased for the purpose of carrying on their own private business, and primarily purchased during the time of the Nation's crisis when their products were in great demand of such vital importance to our country.

The Esch Railroad-Return Bill.

OF
HON. WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD, OF ALABAMA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, November 14, 1919.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, as President Wilson so well said in his special message to Congress on May 19, 1919:

> The question which stands at the front of all others in every country amidst the present great awakening is the question of labor; and perhaps I can speak of it with as great advantage while engrossed in the consideration of interests which affect all countries alike as I could at home and amidst the interests which naturally most affect my thought, because they are the interests of our own people.
> By the question of labor I do not mean the question of efficient industrial production, the question of how labor is to be obtained and made effective in the great process of sustaining populations and winning success amidst commercial and industrial rivalries. I mean that much greater and more vital question, how are the men and women who do the daily labor of the world to obtain progressive improvement in the conditions of their labor, to be made happier, and to be served better by the communities and the industries which their labor sustains and advances?

The wisdom of that admonition is becoming increasingly apparent. It is not only our national problem, it is the great problem of the world.

We can not solve it by invective or vituperation. We can not hope to reach an approximation of the ideal relation between what is called capital and labor in the group designation by the inflammatory denunciation of the acts or the purposes of one or the other. That does not tend to palliate or mollify the situation; it only aggravates it. There is a solution of this vexing dilemma upon a satisfactory basis. It is going to be a tedious course, but by following it alone can we hope, in my judgment, to attain the goal. And that process is not by exacting statutes, by mandatory direction under threat of penalties of coercion. The laboring men of the railroad brotherhoods are a high type of citizenship. They are imbued by not only the protection afforded but by the idealism inspired by our Constitution. They rebel in spirit against legislative duress, directed against their craft alone by this bill. With the best record of all unions with reference to strikes, they are made the first to feel the sting of arbitrary congressional restrictions upon their natural and legal right to improve their condition by collective action.

No, gentlemen, the way of force by law in this crisis is not the way of reason. The way of reason is to give the employer and employee the primary unrestricted opportunity to settle their own differences, in their own way, by representatives of their own choosing, each group sensitive, as they must be, to public opinion and the natural justice of their claims, and ninety-nine times in a hundred, in normal times, they will get together.

The Sweet amendment introduced by Mr. ANDERSON affords this process of settlement. It should be adopted. It has been tried by the Railroad Administration and the brotherhoods ever since Federal control started. Out of thousands of controversies not a single one has failed to reach a satisfactory settlement. With such a record of results I am willing to trust it as a means of mediation and conciliation when the roads are returned to their owners. I am opposed to the Esch bill and the Cummins bill on their labor provisions, as well as for other good reasons. I shall vote against this bill in its present form. It is not fair to the employees and it is not fair to the public.

Return of the Railroads to Private Owners and Settlement of Disputes Between Carriers and Employees.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. IRA G. HERSEY,
OF MAINE,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, November 14, 1919,

On the bill (H. R. 10453) to provide for the termination of Federal control of railroads and systems of transportation; to provide for the settlement of disputes between carriers and their employees; to further amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended, and for other purposes.

Mr. HERSEY. Mr. Chairman, the House of Representatives is now engaged in the consideration of the most important piece of legislation since we declared war against Germany—the return of the railroads to their owners and the settlement of labor disputes in the management of those roads.

In the enactment of this legislation the Members of this Congress should put aside all personal prejudice, refuse to be moved by the voice of the radicals or the propaganda of the profiteers. Such expressions as "Wall Street," and "railroad plutocrats" should fall on deaf ears. Police strikes, defiance of law by coal miners, and the loud voice of the political labor demagogue should not move us in the enactment of legislation that should be for the benefit of all. Let us keep our heads and go about our duties in a safe and sane manner, with only one purpose, and that is to do exact justice between the conflicting interests and to hold the scales equally poised in the settlement of these momentous questions.

Under this bill there are three classes that demand our careful and unbiased consideration:

First, the railroads and their stockholders; second, the workers and employees with their wages and living conditions; and third, the great public that pays the bills and ought to receive the most efficient service.

During the last four days we have very carefully and efficiently considered the interests of the railroads and their stockholders. We have steadily refused to pay any attention whatever to ancient history in the management of the railroads. The sins of the pioneers who built and constructed the great lines of railroads over this country can not settle the problems of the present. That there has been great mismanagement in the past, fraudulent issues of stock, and almost criminal negligence in the management and wrecking of important roads can not be denied, but the pioneers have gone. The watered stock has been sold to innocent purchasers who must be protected. Millions that have been wasted by improper management can never be recovered. The railroads are going back into the hands of new men without scarcely an exception, men trained and qualified for their duties, men who have come up from the section hand and brakeman to managers and presidents of the railroads, men of character, strong men that the Nation trusts.

In the return of these roads we are dealing very kindly with their owners. By this bill we have provided for very liberal financial settlements with the United States. We have voted the roads great credits, promised to refund their obligations, guaranteed their returns for a certain period, and have placed at their disposal the magnificent loan of $250,000,000. In other words, we have attempted to do justice to the railroads and their stockholders, as was our duty to do.

Now we approach a different section of this bill, that which provides for the settlement of disputes between the carriers and their employees; and here also we must be deaf to the voice of the radical, or remember the recent labor riots, or be moved by police or miners' strikes, or be dismayed or lose our sense of justice by the waving of the red flag.

We must bear in mind, however, that we are not dealing with the settlement of labor disputes generally, but only with those that affect the railroads of the country. We are attempting to settle controversies between the railroad management and their employees in the matter of wages and in the matter of living conditions, and all other things that may arise in the course of their employment. We are not attempting to settle these matters in the old way, which gave to the employee only one weapon of defense, and that was the strike. The railroad employees are in a different class from any other labor classes. There are very few ignorant foreigners employed by the roads in any capacity. The officials, general managers, engineers, trainmen, trackmen, machinists, and workers in the car shops are, without scarcely an exception, men of education and intelligence. They have obtained their employment because of good habits, sobriety, and industry, and it is this class of employees whose interests we are here attempting to protect.

During the recent war there have been no strikes upon the railroads. All labor troubles have been settled by a board of arbitration and conciliation appointed by the President, and we are now attempting to continue the efficient service rendered by these men in time of war.

Three plans have been offered to us. First, the plan of the committee bill, which provides a court of arbitration and attempts to enforce its decision by providing that the party that refuses to be bound shall be liable to a suit at law to recover damages, on the part of the labor union against the railroad and on the part of the railroad against the union, and to be collected from the treasury of the union.

The second is the plan of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. WEBSTER], who agrees with the committee in the establishment of a court of arbitration, but provides in his amendment that if the union does not abide by the decision of the court of arbitration then the separate and individual property of each member of the union can be taken to satisfy the verdict.

The third plan is set forth in what is known as the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON], which provides a like court of arbitration but leaves the enforcement of any decision to public opinion.

For my part I favor the Anderson amendment as the best solution of future labor disputes in railroad matters.

We can not legislate successfully to settle labor disputes between the railroads and their employees by suits at law, either by attaching the treasury of labor unions or taking the private property of the individual. Such procedure will only further estrange the parties and lead to increased strikes and labor troubles.

While this bill attempts to arrange only settlement of labor disputes between railroad companies and their employees, let it be understood once and for all that no labor troubles in this land to-day can be successfully settled so as to give us peace by politics or police, by shotguns or soldiers.

The boards of conciliation and arbitration that have been doing wonderful and efficient service for the past two years should be continued in the personnel of this new legislation. This board has settled over 3,000 labor disputes without a strike, and I am convinced that with the procedure provided by the Anderson amendment we shall never have another strike upon any railroad in this country or a threat of a strike.

Last Wednesday the Christian Science Monitor had a very able editorial entitled "Labor and the Golden Rule," and I herewith quote a portion of that editorial as my views upon the settlement of this question. I hope the Anderson amendment will be adopted:

If one thing has been proved lately in labor disputes, it is that no strike which is not supported by public opinion, or which, it would perhaps be better to say, is opposed by public opinion, has a chance of ultimate success. The decisions of the public may not be always just, and must always be reached on broad issues. Nevertheless, when this public opinion has once crystallized the thinking power of the Nation is brought to bear, sympathetically or unsympathetically, upon a particular issue, with the result that the effort to face and overcome the will of the Nation is a task beyond the strength of a particular union. The part, in plain English, when the whole has come to a decided opinion, is rapidly proved to be weaker than the whole.

This really is as it should be, though it is by no means as it always has been. Little by little, however, since the outbreak of the war, the growing power of the unions and the increasing resistance of capital has brought about a condition of things which has constituted two class millstones claiming to grind between them the great mass of the Nation. Such a condition of things could not continue indefinitely. As a result, when the effort was made to thrust the Nation in between them, it was quickly seen that the millstones were not equal to the task which had been set for them. Forced apart, they were found unable to grind, with the result that the general public, realizing its own strength, began to take control of the situation. All this means that the responsibility has now been transferred from this class or that class, from one interest or another interest, to the people and that the responsibility for holding the scales equal passes to the public. It is this fact that has to be realized and to be realized in its full significance at the present moment.

The point at issue is, in other words, a much larger one than the interests of either class; it is nothing more nor less than what is right in the matter. In any technical dispute as to the conditions of a trade it is almost impossible for a person who is not possessed of the necessary detailed knowledge to arrive at a fair decision; on the other hand, an altogether unbiased view is not to be expected from either party to the dispute. In such circumstances no decision is likely to be entirely acceptable to everybody. None the less a decision can and should be reached which will be felt to be broadly just to all concerned. What the world has to realize is that the statement, so often made, that the social system underwent a convulsion during the Great War, is true in substance and in fact. The claims put forward in justification of that war, at all events by the Allies, were founded on the golden rule; and the golden rule having been accepted for the purposes of the war can not safely be discarded now. It is, of course, perfectly true that wages have risen tremendously since the outbreak of the war, but it is none the less true that the cost of living has risen in a proportionate or even in a greater degree. This is not a statement of opinion, but one which can be easily tested and verified, and this not out of the experience of an individual trade, but of the entire country. If, therefore, it is once admitted that the conditions of labor before the war were not satisfactory, it will have to be admitted that the conditions since the war remain unsatisfactory.

Let there be no doubt at all about one thing, and that one thing is that labor is claiming a greater share of the pleasant things of this world than it has ever claimed before; and then let the individual ask himself whether, with the golden rule as the test of decision, this is an unjust claim or a just one. That labor has been in too great a hurry to reach what it considers its goal, and has, notably in its police strikes, done much to estrange public opinion and to forfeit its right to consideration under the golden rule, is without a doubt. At the same time it would be a bold man who would maintain that capital had been blameless in the matter. But, in any case, the fact remains that labor is claiming more of the results of its own labor than in the past and that public opinion is upon its side in this claim, though it may be opposed to it in certain definite expressions of it. When manual labor, for instance, demands the whole fruit of industry, on the ground that this fruit could not be gathered without it, it is indulging in the most dangerous of inaccuracies, a half truth. It is perfectly true that you can not run a railway system without manual labor. But it is equally obvious that manual labor deprived of mental direction would be no more able to run a railway than mental direction without manual labor. When the laborer claims that you can not work a railway system without him, the adaptor of the use of steam or electricity to modern conditions might reply that without the engine the railway system would be of no account, and he might claim the whole profits of the operation on this ground. The fact is that intelligence even more than muscle is the indispensable element in railway development. So that the claim of manual labor to divide to itself the profits of all labor is not only an untenable one, but an unintelligent and even a ridiculous one. This has been proved to the hilt in the soviet administration of Russia, with the result that the soviets are now asking for the cooperation of men whom a little time ago they were ready to destroy as parasites preying upon labor.

What the world has to decide in the present moment is the equitable division of the fruits of labor between all those engaged in producing them. And in arriving at this it will have to face the fact that one man under the golden rule should not be endowed with a fortune that may be a danger to society, whilst another can scarcely feed, clothe, and educate a family. Labor, that is to say, is demanding its share of the comforts and pleasures of existence, and any attempt to withhold these from labor is bound to end in disaster, because it is an infringement of principle.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired, and the question now comes on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] to the substitute proposed by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. WEBSTER].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. NOLAN) there were—151 ayes and 75 noes.

So the amendment to the substitute was agreed to.

The Long and Short Haul.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. BURTON L. FRENCH,

OF IDAHO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, November 15, 1919.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, in my remarks a little while ago I cited the case of the Stanton Packing Co., of Spokane, and its shipment of a carload of lard to Chicago, the company finding it cheaper to ship the lard to Seattle and then have it shipped by their representative from Seattle back through Spokane to Chicago—cheaper, I say, than to have shipped the car to Chicago from Spokane. The case has proven so interesting to Members that under my leave to extend I shall recite the waybills touching the transaction.

They are as follows:

Spokane, Wash., Nov. 27, 1911. Shipper's No. 23609. By Northern Pacific Railroad Co.
Consigned to: E. H. Stanton Co. Destination: % H. I. Norton Co., Seattle, Wn. Car initialed: C. & N. W. Car No.: 10396.

Indorsed on face: Orig. sent to Norton Co., Seattle, 11-29-11 to deliver Ry. Co.

Seattle, Wash., 1911. Shipper's No. 23610. By Northern Pacific Railroad Co.
Consigned to: John Miller & Co., Chicago, Ill. Car initial: C. & N. W. Car No. 10396.
No. packages: 139. Description of articles and special marks: Bbls. tallow. Weight subject to correction: 62,100.
Via N. P. C. & N. W.
E. H. Stanton Co., Inc., shippers.

Please notice the shipper's numbers, the number of the car, the number of packages, the point of origin, and the point of destination. Remember, then, that this carload of lard was hauled from Spokane to Seattle for 50 cents per hundred, hauled from Seattle back through Spokane to Chicago for 60 cents per hundred, a total of $1.10. Remember, then, that the rate from Spokane to Chicago was $1.25 per hundred, and that by permitting the railroad to haul the car 700 miles farther there was saved in freight charges $93.15.

In rebuttal to my argument gentlemen have said that if the long-and-short-haul provision should be inserted freight rates would be higher to the interior points, because so much business would be diverted to water lines that rates would need to be raised to make up the profits. The coast cities are urging this contention.

Gentlemen, the fallacy of the contention lies in this: If the freight rates were to be higher to the inland sections of country, it would be because the rates of transportation by water would be so low that the railroads would lose their business to the coast terminals. Now, if that would occur it would be to the distinct advantage of the coast cities, so the spectacle is presented to the House and to the country of the cities on the coast doing everything that they can to prevent lower rates to them and greater rates to the inland cities which if it were to result would give them such a distinct advantage in wholesale trade as to practically wipe the inland cities off the map.

Is not the fallacy apparent? And, gentlemen, if the result they claim would occur—could possibly occur—do you think for one moment the coast cities would be trying to prevent it?

There is another thing I want to call attention to briefly. I have already mentioned that the cost of building the Panama Canal was nearly a half billion of dollars. To be exact, up to June 30, 1919, the actual cost was $365,415,985.18.

These figures do not include preliminary expenses, expenses of negotiation, purchase of rights, and so forth, nor do they include any allowance for interest. Whether we sell bonds to build the canal or advance money direct from the Treasury, we should add to the total an interest equivalent to be based on the rate at which the United States was borrowing money prior to June 30, 1919. Counting in all of these expenses, the canal has cost the people about $500,000,000.

But figuring the total investment at around $400,000,000, we would need to receive an income of $12,000,000 annually in order to pay 3 per cent on the investment, and, mind you, this does not take into account upkeep, depreciation, and other liabilities that occur. The canal has been in operation from 1914 until the present. I wish to insert here a statement showing the cost of maintenance and operation, the revenues, and figures to show whether or not the revenues exceed the expenses or the expenses exceed the revenues.

Panama Canal, maintenance and operation account.

Fiscal year	Maintenance and operation, including proportion of overhead.	Revenues.	Revenues in excess of expenses.	Expenses in excess of revenues.	Excess of revenues over expenses to June 30, 1919.	Excess of expenses over revenues to June 30, 1919.
1914	$166,030.91	[1] $14,618.68		$151,412.23		$151,412.23
1915	4,123,128.09	4,343,383.69	$220,255.60		$68,843.37
1916	6,999,750.15	[2] 2,558,542.38		4,441,207.77		4,519,177.92
1917	6,788,047.60	5,808,398.70		979,648.90		5,352,013.30
1918	5,920,342.94	6,411,843.28	491,500.34			4,860,512.96
1919	6,112,194.77	6,354,016.98	241,822.21			4,618,690.75
	30,109,494.46	25,490,803.71	953,578.15	5,572,268.90		4,618,690.75

[1] Tolls on barges towed through the canal prior to opening to commercial ships.
[2] Heavy drop due to closing canal 6 months on account of slides.

Looking over the foregoing, there was only one year when the balances were not in the red; that is, when we could say that up to that moment the revenues exceeded the expenditures of maintaining and operating the canal, and to-day the sum total of operation and maintenance of the last six years, ending June 30, 1919, indicates expenses $30,109,494.46, revenues $25,490,803.71, an excess of expenses over revenues of $4,618,690.75.

Bear in mind this does not include one penny of the $12,000,000 that I said we would need to receive in profits from the canal to pay even 3 per cent interest on the investment.

We, then, have fallen more than $4,600,000 short of paying the operating and maintenance expenses up to June 30, 1919.

Yet gentlemen urge here a policy that in the face of this means that ships will need to be operated at disadvantage on the canal, that coast-to-coast trade will be strangled, and that the people of this country will not receive the advantages in the reduction of freight rates that they are legitimately entitled to receive.

Can you not see that it is illogical; that it is unfair?

I could not conclude without expressing the appreciation of the intermountain country to Judge J. STANLEY WEBSTER, from our Northwest, who in season and out of season and before the Members of the House on the committee has so earnestly and ably labored to present the point of view of our people on this vital issue and for his efforts looking to relief. It is a matter of keenest regret that members of the committee felt that there are other features that overshadow this question and that they felt, when they finally drafted the bill, that this feature should not be disturbed.

I hope, gentlemen of the House, you may feel that in this one regard the committee was too cautious and that you will permit the amendment offered to prevail. The question must be righted at some time. Let us do it now.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HENRY I. EMERSON,
OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, November 17, 1919.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, under leave to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD, I desire to insert an editorial from the Cleveland Press, Cleveland, Ohio, showing the industrial unrest in the country at the present time:

The industrial unrest in this country is due directly to high prices.
Until prices are forced down to a fair level, there can be no lasting industrial peace.
Three months ago President Wilson in a message to Congress voiced what the country already knew—namely, that:
"The prices the people are paying for everything necessary in order to live are not justified by a shortage of supply * * * and are in many cases artificially and deliberately created by vicious practices which ought immediately to be checked."
Thereupon the people were promised lower prices. Hopes ran high.
The Government began firing giant guns.
We now recognize that the big guns were firing blank cartridges. The cost of living has not dropped.
Although 11 cents has been determined as a fair price for sugar, the Department of Justice now informs the country that "Louisiana sugar" will cost consumers nearly 19 cents a pound.
Chicago butchers strike. To prove that many master butchers have been charging exorbitant prices, they open a market of their own.
"Our market," said Bob Hertz, South Side union business agent, "sold meat at least a third cheaper than the average butcher. Yet we made a clear profit of $547 on Saturday's sales alone."
Attorney General Palmer on August 6 reviewed the Federal Trade Commission's investigation of the packers and declared:
"I am satisfied that the evidence adduced indicates a clear violation of the antitrust laws."
That was over three months ago. Why aren't those antitrust laws enforced and the violators punished?
Special Federal Prosecutor Kresel, investigating the formation of a food trust, reported to the Chicago Federal grand jury that "the packers are financially interested in at least 675 lines of food production and distribution."
Congress has pigeonholed the Kenyon-Kendrick bills designed to curb and control the packers for the protection of consumers.
Nor is Congress alone in sleeping at the switch.
What has become of Gov. Cox's attack on profiteers that started with a conference of county prosecutors in July?
A few cases were tried. A few fines were imposed.
Prices have not dropped. The prosecutors snore.
Speculation in foodstuffs in the United States and throughout the world's markets is largely responsible for "high food prices," said Herbert Hoover, September 1.
At that time Government figures showed 10,000,000,000 pounds of food stored in warehouses in this country.
The Department of Justice knows where every pound of that food is. We have Howard Figg's word for it. He is special assistant United States attorney general.
Why doesn't the Government force at least part of this hoard upon the market? Congress six weeks ago passed the necessary cold-storage law.
The Lever food and fuel control act was enforced in the case of the coal miners. It made them abandon their strike for higher wages and better hours.

But the Lever Act is not being enforced in other directions.

It is not being enforced in the case of food and clothing profiteers, although it specifically applies to them in the matter of hoarding or charging unreasonable prices.

Let the Government use this law against food and clothing profiteers, as it did against the coal miners, and there will be quick relief for gouged consumers.

Although armed with powerful laws to curb profiteers, Washington is leading us in circles. Prices continue high.

If the present machine can not be made to function, let's bring back Herbert Hoover. Let's restore war-time regulations, fix all prices, and stop the manipulation of necessities, so that people can live within their incomes.

Lowering prices is the direct road to industrial peace.

The Railroad Bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN M. EVANS,

OF MONTANA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, November 15, 1919,

On the bill (H. R. 10453) to provide for the termination of Federal control of railroads and systems of transportation; to provide for the settlement of disputes between carriers and their employees; to further amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended, and for other purposes.

Mr. EVANS of Montana. Mr. Speaker, in the brief time allotted to me I can not undertake to discuss this bill as a whole, but I do want to register my opposition to the amendment offered by my good friend from Washington [Mr. WEBSTER].

I want to submit to this House that we ought not to be swept away by the immediate conditions as to the present state of affairs which may result in continued turmoil. The time is not far past when labor is this country was a mere commodity, a chattel in the hands of the great concerns that employed it. The war came along. New adjustments and conditions were brought forward, and we have been swept by some radical elements among the laboring people to, in some instances, an opposite extreme. I hold no brief for capital or for labor organizations as such, but I do claim the right to speak a word in behalf of the public in this country, which is tired of the turmoil and the controversies that exist.

Under the amendment of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. WEBSTER], a group is denominated as any two or more and a strike is an abandonment of employment by two or more. Let us say that the gentleman from Washington and myself are working for a railroad company, and for reasons peculiarly our own, sufficient unto us, we decide to quit the employment.

Under the provisions of this law we constitute a group, and we can not only be penalized but we can be haled into the courts of the country by the corporation for which we are working and deprived of our property because we have exercised the right to quit the employment. That is not all. This bill gives a laboring man the right to sue the corporation only, and not the officials or the stockholders, and it gives the corporation the right to sue the laboring men and each one, and I can not imagine a condition more conducive to controversy and strife, a condition more impossible than for men who are working for a railroad to be haled into court to be sued for damages by the railroad, or vice versa. Under such a condition you would have none of that era of peace that sometimes looks impossible but for which we all hope. You will have it, to some extent, however, when you create a board, no matter how constituted, to whom these questions may be submitted. I do not care whether their judgments are final or not, or whether there is the right of appeal or the power to enforce them, for I say to you that the force of public opinion will be the controlling element.

It is to be assumed that it is the intention of Congress to return the railroads to their private owners in practically the same condition as when they were taken over by the Government, and if necessary to provide financial assistance for them until they can readjust themselves to the changed conditions. That, I say, I assume to be the intention of Congress; personally I am opposed to returning the roads at the present time. I think instead of returning them now we should enact the necessary and proper legislation to govern and control the roads as they are for the next two years, but from what has been said on this floor and from the present state of public opinion, I am satisfied that this or some similar bill will eventually pass this House. I shall therefore do what I can to perfect the same, but under no circumstances can I vote for the Webster amendment. It is unjust, unrighteous, and un-American.

Mr. Speaker, the whole scheme of the proposition in the bill regarding labor legislation was conceived and worked out in the subcommittee, which was a most difficult undertaking. The subcommittee's plan, or the provisions of it, are not all acceptable to me, but the objects and purposes are. It is the object and the purpose of legislation that should measure its good or its evil effects rather than the machinery that, on first blush, is proposed.

The object and purpose of the Sweet amendment, now offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON], is intended to accomplish the same purpose. There are some provisions that I would prefer over the committee's bill. I will vote for the Anderson substitute as an amendment to the Webster substitute. Gentlemen get up here and say, "We want something that has teeth in it." What are the teeth they refer to—the teeth of the carnivorous animal, of the flesh-tearing and lacerating variety, the teeth of barbarism, of uncivilization? What is our object? What are we trying to do? Bring about agreement between those that are in disagreement. This should not even be called a decision, because it is not, in fact. There comes about a condition calling for the modifying of an existing contract. Therefore, not being a question of law only, but rather a question of justice between the employer and employee, it is highly proper that it should be submitted to an adjustment board composed of equal numbers of employers and employees, and let them try to modify the contract by agreement, because they are parties to it. What business has the public in that kind of a controversy? The public did not make the contract and would not know how it ought to be modified.

But the public has an interest above and beyond all others, and that is the interest to bring about an amicable modification of the contract without resorting to the teeth of the dog or the club of the savage or the bayonet of Prussianism. I tried, and I think the subcommittee tried and worked as hard as men could work, to keep prison bars out of the bill and to keep felons' stripes out of the bill and to keep handcuffs off the wrists of labor. All of this outcry for making a strike unlawful pending the adjustment of a controversy is to give jurisdiction to the civil courts to issue injunctions and put a man behind the bars without a trial by his peers.

If I am correct in my assumption that these properties should go back to their owners in practically the same condition as when we took them, then we are not justified in putting an anti-strike clause in this bill; there was no antistrike clause in any bill when we assumed control of the roads. What we need to do is to try to be fair and just to all parties, including the public.

When the international situation became serious in this country the railroad employees were the first ones to rally to the support of the Government by declaring a truce and forbidding the men to make any demands or to handle to a final conclusion any dispute arising between the carriers and the employees. Immediately after war was declared all the railroads were taken over by the Government, and the railroad brotherhoods pledged themselves to the support of the President and the Government of the United States and entered into agreements with the Government that there would be no strikes and provided for the establishment of tribunals to handle labor disputes. These boards were organized, and in a period of less than a year and a half they handled more than 3,100 disputes arising, on which a unanimous vote of the boards was had.

The railroad brotherhoods guaranteed to the employer that if any of the men practiced an illegal or unauthorized strike they would be expelled from the organization and men furnished the employers to take the place of such striking employees.

There have been created under Government control three railway boards of adjustment, which the Anderson substitute proposes to perpetuate by simply transferring from the Railroad Administration to the Government by statute these boards, giving them legal status, and it is only a simple matter of transferring the organization of these boards, their present efficient clerical forces, and so forth, to the Government and the continuation of the plans already in effect.

This is a simple matter and will save time and expense in the organizing of new tribunals which are not now in existence. The provision of the Anderson substitute is a guaranty that there will be no strikes or lockouts until after two boards have had an opportunity to review and pass upon a question, which is going further than has ever been done heretofore, as no one has ever ventured to provide for more than one tribunal to adjust these disputes. In substance, it means to turn over the railroads to the private owners and prevents any changes in working conditions or other conditions of employment until every effort has been exerted between the employees and their employers by direct negotiation, and then if a dispute arises and the parties are unable to agree, it goes to the railway board of adjustment; and then if no decision is had by the railway board of adjustment the matter is referred to a commission on labor disputes, who shall hear and decide the question.

This is the culmination of more than 50 years' efforts on the part of the carriers and their employees to perfect a plan that will absolutely guarantee to both parties a fair and equitable adjustment of any matter that can not be adjusted between the parties themselves, and creates the ideal condition for which the people of this country have looked for more than a quarter of a century; therefore the Anderson substitute should, by all means, prevail and become the law if it is the desire of Congress to place on the statute books a real workable plan.

The provisions of the substitute provide for practical, experienced men in each and every instance to hear and determine the questions of dispute as they arise, and if this substitute becomes effective it will do more to destroy the principles of the radicals in this country than any one thing that has been done or perhaps everything that has been done so far, and it will be the final and fatal blow to radicalism and Bolshevism in so far as the transportation industry is concerned, and will be accepted by the employees on the railroads as a constructive, fair, and reasonable solution of the adjustment of labor disputes.

Mr. Speaker, there has been a great deal said here to-day about violation of contracts. I desire to say to the Members of Congress that so far as my own personal knowledge informs me the railroad employees of the four brotherhoods have never violated a contract which they have made. When they make a contract it is binding as far as they are concerned, for they are loyal, patriotic American citizens; and, without casting any reflections on any other class of workingmen, I want to say that of the 110,000,000 people in our land there is no class that is more law-abiding, patriotic, and intelligent than the railroad employees.

The Threatening Menace of Disloyalty—Bill Proposed for the Suppression of Anarchy, Sedition, Disloyalty, I. W. W.ism, Bolshevism, Radicalism, and un-Americanism.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN W. SUMMERS,

OF WASHINGTON,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, November 17, 1919.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, while marching in peaceful and joyous parade, celebrating the first anniversary of Armistice Day at Centralia, Wash., four ex-service men, but recently from overseas duty, were shot dead, while others were seriously injured. These foul murders were committed from ambush and without warning within as loyal a State as graces the American Union.

Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, with this I bring to your attention the great and threatening menace of anarchy, sedition, disloyalty, I. W. W.ism, Bolshevism, radicalism, and un-Americanism in all their various forms, and I beg of you, as I beg of every ex-service man and loyal citizen of the United States, to plant your feet upon the solid rock of Americanism and look the situation squarely in the face, with a determination to take speedy and decisive action to silence and to forever put at naught the teachings of these enemies within our gates.

During sevenscore years the majesty of our laws, the wisdom of our Constitution, and the supremacy of our flag have time and again been threatened, and now, despite the loud barking and dastardly crimes that have recently been committed throughout the country, the structure of American government is more substantial than that of any other great nation, and in the future, as in the past, will weather every storm. So long as our press, our schools, our churches, and our firesides are perpetual shrines of patriotism, we shall not fall. The great American heart is sound. We can rely upon the hundred millions or more within our borders whose patriotism is above question.

But, Mr. Speaker, the Attorney General of the United States tells us that 327 radical newspapers are being printed in the United States, mostly in foreign languages, spreading anarchism and Bolshevism throughout the country, and that there is no law by which they can be suppressed. The evidence indicates that they are receiving funds from outside the United States. Negroes are being enlisted on the side of the reds.

The Attorney General states further:

One of the most potent and far-reaching influences in stirring up discontent, race prejudice, and class hatred in this country is the large number of radical newspapers and other publications which are given wide circulation.

Many of these publications frankly urge the overthrow of the Government. The editors of these papers and the writers of these books have a subtle way of placing this propaganda before their readers. But the reader understands what is meant.

There are 222 radical newspapers published in foreign languages in this country at the present time and 105 radical newspapers published in the English language. In addition, 144 radical newspapers published in foreign countries are received and distributed to subscribers here.

NATIONALITY OF PUBLICATIONS.

This number does not include the hundreds of books, pamphlets, and other publications which also receive wide circulation, many of them published in foreign languages.

The number of these radical publications and the language in which they are printed follow: Armenian, 1; Bohemian, 9; Bulgarian, 3; Croatian, 4; Danish, 4; Esthonian, 1; Finnish, 11; French, 1; German, 21; Greek, 2; Hungarian, 23; Italian, 27; Jewish, 20; Lettish, 11; Portuguese, 1; Roumanian, 16; Slovenian, 8; Spanish, 8; Lithuanian, 15; Polish, 7; Swedish, 6; Ukrainian, 8; and Yiddish, 15.

All of these radical publications are read and translated by the Department of Justice in cooperation with the Post Office Department. A force of 40 translators, readers, and assistants is employed for this purpose, and daily reports are received on the radical articles that appear. It may be interesting to point out here that the I. W. W. now circulates 13 papers printed in the English language and 19 papers printed in foreign language.

RESPONSIBLE FOR BOLSHEVISM.

These newspapers and publications more than any other one thing, perhaps, are responsible for the spread of the Bolshevik, revolutionary, and extreme radical doctrines in this country. Every effort is made to get them into the hands of persons who it is believed will be swayed by their teachings.

The reader or subscriber of a radical newspaper uses his paper not only for his own information but as a means of propaganda to educate his fellow workman and inoculate him with the doctrine of anarchism, communism, and radical socialism and thus enlist his services in the revolution.

From the date of the signing of the armistice a wave of radicalism appears to have swept over the country, which is best evidenced by the fact that since that date approximately 50 radical newspapers have commenced publication. A large number of these papers openly advocate the destruction of the United States Government and encourage and advise their readers to prepare for the coming revolution.

MONEY FROM OUTSIDE SOURCES.

It is also a noticeable fact that a great many of these publications are practically void of advertising matter, which indicates that they are receiving money from outside sources to further their propaganda.

CITIZENS MUST NOT BE POLLUTED.

Gentlemen, I have no fear for the perpetuity of our Government, but the exigencies of the hour demand immediate action on the part of this Congress in order that these publications may be suppressed and that these 60,000 red vipers may be controlled. Our citizens must not be polluted by these doctrines. Proposed legislation has been brought before the Senate, but it has not yet found opportunity for its consideration. I have therefore prepared and am bringing to your attention a growth and a modification of the ideas of several gentlemen in the following bill:

A bill to prohibit and punish certain seditious acts against the Government of the United States and to prohibit the use of the mails for the purpose of promoting such acts.

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons to advocate or advise the overthrow, or to write, or knowingly to print, publish, utter, sell, or distribute any document, book, circular, paper, journal, magazine, or other written or printed communication, in or by which there is advised the overthrow, by force or violence, or by both force and violence, or by physical injury to person or property of the Government of the United States or of all government, or to advise or advocate a change in the form of government or the Constitution of the United States or resistance to the authority thereof by force or violence or by physical injury to person or property, or by force or violence to prevent, hinder, or delay or attempt to prevent, hinder, or delay the execution of any law of the United States.

SEC. 2. That the possession, display, or exhibition at any meeting, gathering, or parade, or at any other place, public or private, of any flag, banner, or emblem intended by the person or persons possessing, displaying, or exhibiting the same to symbolize or indicate a purpose to overthrow by force or violence or by physical injury to person or property, the Government of the United States or all government, is hereby declared to be unlawful.

SEC. 3. That every document, book, circular, paper, journal, magazine, or other written or printed communication in or by which there is advocated or advised the overthrow by force or violence or by physical injury to person or property of the Government of the United States or of all government, or in or by which there is advocated or advised the use of force or violence or physical injury to or the seizure or destruction of persons or property as a means toward the accomplishment of economic, industrial, or political changes is hereby declared to be nonmailable, and the same shall not be conveyed in the mails or delivered from any post office or by any letter carrier: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to authorize any person other than an employee of the dead-letter office duly authorized thereto or other person upon a search warrant authorized by law to open any letter not addressed to himself.

SEC. 4. That it shall be unlawful to import or cause to be imported into the United States or any place subject to its jurisdiction any matter declared by section 3 of this act to be nonmailable, or to transport or cause to be transported any such matter from one State to another or into any place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States.

SEC. 5. That whoever shall use or attempt to use the mails or the Postal Service of the United States for the transmission of any matter declared by section 3 of this act to be nonmailable, or who shall violate any other of the provisions of this act, shall be fined not less than $500 nor more than $20,000 or imprisoned not less than 1 year nor more than 20 years, or such fine and imprisonment may both be imposed, and if a naturalized citizen of the United States, then upon conviction under this act, his citizenship may, at the discretion of the United States Commissioner of Immigration, be canceled, and if an alien or a denaturalized citizen, shall be, upon the expiration of his sentence, deported from the United States and forever barred from reentering the United States or any territory under its jurisdiction.

NO RESPECTER OF PERSONS.

With bowed head and with shame I must state that both natural and naturalized American citizens, to a certain extent, in some localities have joined with aliens in these seditious acts and utterances, so while the bill provides for denaturalization and deportation, under certain conditions, it is no respecter of persons in so far as fine and imprisonment are concerned.

It is aimed at all who would overthrow our Government by force or violence.

Mr. Speaker, this is not the time for much speaking. The house is burning. I beg for immediate consideration and favorable action on the bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. THOMAS S. CRAGO,

OF PENNSYLVANIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, November 15, 1919.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Speaker, it was my pleasant privilege to attend the rededication exercises of the reconstructed court house of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, held October 27, 1919. I have a copy of the address delivered by Justice Stafford on that occasion, and it is such a timely and beautiful word picture of respect for law that I ask unanimous consent to insert this address and a short account of the proceedings of this rededication in the RECORD.

REDEDICATION OF THE COURTHOUSE OF THE SUPREME COURT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

"The dedicatory exercises of the reconstructed courthouse of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia were held on the afternoon of Monday, October 27, 1919, in the presence of the justices and officers of the various courts, members of the bar, the Columbia Historical Society, and Oldest Inhabitants' Association, and a large gathering of the general public. The exercises were held on the lawn on the north side of the building, and the program was in keeping with the occasion.

"The exercises opened with an invocation by Rev. Charles Wood, pastor of the Church of the Covenant. Mr. H. Prescott Gatley, president of the District Bar Association, in introducing Mr. Chief Justice McCoy as the presiding officer, said in part:

"'The corner stone of the building was laid a century ago. I feel safe in saying that prior to the transformation that has recently taken place in it, judging from its then appearance, everyone was prepared to admit its age without argument. Now that it has been so magnificently remodeled and reconstructed it was deemed appropriate that fitting ceremonies attend its opening. It also seems eminently fitting that one who played no small part in procuring this beautiful structure and who presides over the courts held within its walls should preside at these ceremonies.'

"Mr. Chief Justice McCoy, in a brief address, paid eloquent tribute to his predecessor, Chief Justice Covington, who was able to secure from Congress the first appropriation for reconstruction of the building; to Mr. Elliott Woods, Superintendent of the Capitol, who had charge of the work; to Mr. August Eccard, superintendent of construction, and others who had part in the work on the building. He referred feelingly to a beautiful gift of flowers coming from an unknown donor 'in loving memory of Mr. Justice Thomas H. Anderson.' The Chief Justice then, in turn, felicitously introduced the speakers, Mr. Justice Stafford, former Chief Justice Covington, and Mr. Henry E. Davis.

ADDRESS OF JUSTICE WENDELL PHILLIPS STAFFORD.

"The first thing to be noted is that the ceremony which brings us together is not a dedication merely; it is a rededication. There is an element of value in the fact that on the selfsame spot justice is administered from generation to generation. So strongly did our English brothers feel it, that only with the greatest reluctance did they remove their courts from that 'certain place' where for many centuries they had been held, the celebrated Hall of Westminster; and some even contended that it was unconstitutional, a violation of Magna Charta itself, to do so. In early ages the pagan temple was transformed into the Christian Church. The early Christian, as a rule, did not demolish the old shrines; he breathed into them a new spirit, and made use of all he found there that was not inconsistent with the brighter and larger revelation. Where the old instinct of worship had found expression, there he taught men to observe a better ritual:

"Tantum ergo sacramentum
Veneremur cernui:
Et antiquum documentum
Novo cedat ritui.

"So in the crypt of York Cathedral they still show you the remnants of the heathen altar that connects their service with early Anglo-Saxon times.

"The feeling that thus prompts men to preserve the symbolic continuity of their spiritual life is a true feeling, based on the soundest philosophy. For, after all, it is not to the present form of faith alone that the temple is erected, but also to that primitive, permanent, catholic instinct of worship which antedates all forms and may outlast them all.

"So it is when we are dealing with another great and universal sentiment—justice. The forms and methods through which men will seek to make justice their own will, no doubt, vary in the future as they have in the past. Laws will pass away; constitutions themselves will be altered or supplanted; but the sentiment of justice will not be lost. It carries innumerable laws and constitutions in its bosom; and it is to that sentiment itself, rather than to any present-day embodiment of its aspiration, that we dedicate this place.

"The earliest conception of justice appears to have been not an act of any lawmaking assembly but a judgment pronounced by the primitive ruler—the patriarch-king. In the belief of his people it was a divine inspiration, what we should call a stroke of genius. His judgments were called themistes, from the name of the goddess of justice, Themis, whose mouthpiece he was supposed to be. Browning has given us a fascinating, if highly imaginary, picture of that original court scene:

"A king lived long ago,
In the morning of the world,
When earth was nigher heaven than now;
And the king's locks curled,
Disparting o'er a forehead full
As the milk-white space 'twixt horn and horn
Of some sacrificial bull.
Among the rocks his city was:
Before his palace, in the sun,
He sat to see his people pass,
And judge them every one
From its threshold of smooth stone.
They haled him many a valley thief
Caught in the sheep pens, robber chief,
Swarthy and shameless, beggar-cheat,
Spy-prowler, or rough pirate found
On the sea-sand left aground;
And sometimes clung about his feet,
With bleeding lip and burning cheek,
A woman, bitterest wrong to speak.
These, all and every one,
The king judged, sitting in the sun
His councillors, on left and right,
Looked anxious up—but no surprise
Disturbed the king's old smiling eyes:
Such grace had kings when the world began!

"We have traveled a long road since then. How can we expect men any longer to revere the law, which they now understand to be no gift of a god, but only the result of conflicting social forces—a conflict in which, perhaps, the individual's own idea of what the law should be has been overborne? And yet, if men are capable of taking a broader view, they will see that there is really something noble and august in this new conception of law as the expressed will of a free and mighty people; and there should be something impressive, not to say awe-inspiring, in the visible enforcement of that will. This may not be the poorest of all times to consider whether it may not be worth all the pains we can take to surround the execution of the law with every form of dignity and propriety that may serve to touch the imagination of the people and lead them to associate the act with all that is worthy of regard and veneration. For one thing is certain: There never was a great people that did not venerate the law. What gave Sparta her long supremacy among the States of Greece? What, indeed, but her inflexible—you might almost call it her blind and unreasoning—fidelity to law? 'Stranger, go tell the Spartans that we lie here in obedience to their laws.' Those were the words graven on the tomb of Leonidas and his companions at Thermopylæ. There they slept in simple, unquestionable obedience to a law that said no Spartan ever should retreat, no matter what the odds. Such a sentiment, inspiring all its members, is enough to make any nation great. Without some such reverence for law, the authentic voice of our millions of self-governed men, we may pile our wealth in mountains, but we shall be as a rope of sand.

"I have often longed for the gift of a sculptor that I might carve at the entrance to a court like this a group of figures that should body forth our conception of the judicial mind struggling with the problems that confront it here. This is what I would try to show:

"High on her single-seated judgment throne,
With forward-gazing eyes, girded, erect,
Sits the wide-browed undaunted Intellect,
Resolving her dark doubt. Love, making moan,
Clings round her neck; and reaching to her zone,
Pale pity kneels; and, striving to deflect
Her forthright vision, Falsehood stands bedecked;
Blind Rumor's trumpet in her ear is blown;
And with raised hand white Vengeance whispers, 'Slay!'
Unmoved she sits, till Falsehood glides away,
Rumor lets fall his trump, Vengeance his stone,
And Love and Pity turn aside to pray:
Then, calling back her angels, heavenward flown—
Justice and Truth, she hears these two alone!

"How can we dedicate this house without a thought for those who once had labors here, and now are passed forever from its halls? Many have left us in these last few years. They would have rejoiced with us to see this day. I can not trust myself to call their names, and I know that they will come to you without my summons. Men they were of many and varied gifts; some with a touch of humor that lighted up the dusty ways, some with a golden eloquence that held us willing prisoners, some with world-wide learning, and some with the habit of silent, sleepless toil—good men and true, zealous guardians of the rights committed to their care—our friends, our brothers! Memory will never paint a picture of the old familiar rooms and leave them out.

"As years go on, what tragedies will be enacted here! What comedies of error, a cynic might suggest; but to-day we will not hear him. Here will come all tongues, all creeds, all races—the aggrieved with eagerness to have his wrong redressed, the wrongdoer with reluctance lest his sin should find him out. May all men look upon it as a place where justice may be found.

"O Themis, daughter of heaven and earth, goddess of justice, if still thou livest and givest heed to the affairs of men, listen to us who come to dedicate this place unto such things as in the days of old were dear to thee! Let even the dullest who come about these altars feel that thou art near! May the judges be pure of heart, patient and open-minded, swift to hear, slow to speak,

"good men,
But not so absolute in goodness
As to forget what human frailty is!

"May the juries be anxious only to find the truth and establish it by their verdicts; the witnesses able and willing to tell the truth, and the litigants willing to have them! May the advocates be more zealous to vindicate the truth than to maintain their causes! May he that triumphs depart without exultation, and he that is defeated without resentment! And finally, O Themis, may thy bandage never slip; but if it should, ever so little let it serve only to show thee the side of the weak and the oppressed!"

The Railroad Bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WILLIAM C. LANKFORD,
OF GEORGIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, November 17, 1919,

On the bill (H. R. 10453) to provide for the termination of Federal control of railroads and systems of transportation; to provide for the settlement of disputes between carriers and their employees; to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended; and for other purposes.

Mr. LANKFORD. Mr. Speaker, this bill, commonly called the railroad bill, is of tremendous importance, and if passed will work for weal or woe long after we have passed off this stage of action.

In this measure we are not legislating for this generation alone but for the future of the race. We are attempting in a few short hours to shape the future railroad policy of the United States.

Are we doing the best possible thing for our Nation? I am afraid we are not. I secured a copy of this bill at the earliest possible moment. I have read and reread and studied the 86 pages of the bill, and I am afraid of it.

Among other serious objections, I believe that it goes too far toward centralizing railroad control here in Washington and doing away with the rights of the States to control the roads within their bounds. I fear it has the evils of Government ownership without the benefits. When you do away with the rights of the States you do away with the rights of the people in those States. You thereby strike a blow at the liberty for which our forefathers fought.

I fear if the bill passes in its present form we injure our States, injure the short lines of railroad, injure the public, and injure the great common people.

There is much of merit in the bill, but there is so much that I am opposed to until I can not persuade myself to vote for the measure.

But, Mr. Speaker, I do not have sufficient time at my disposal now to permit me to discuss in detail my objections to the measure. I may at a more convenient season discuss the measure more in detail. I will say, however, that I am bitterly opposed to the United States Government agreeing to protect the railroads against loss for any length of time after they are turned back to private owners. I am also opposed to the provision which the bill has inviting the railroads to ask for higher freight and passenger rates. Of course, the railroads will accept the invitation and the people will be forced to pay the bill. I am opposed to such a course. But I can not in this five minutes discuss the bill in detail.

At present let me say that all of us should study this bill, before we finally dispose of it, as carefully as we would study a will of some relative under which we are to get great property rights. Every word counts. Hundreds of books of Supreme Court decisions in the future will tell of our intent, as expressed by the language in this bill. Millions—yes, billions—of dollars of property rights hang on every phrase.

The rights of over a hundred million people are expressed in the language of the measure. Are we properly safeguarding those rights or are we about to surrender those rights? Study every sentence, every paragraph, every clause, every phrase, and every word of the measure and then conscientiously answer for the American people.

Railroads and Railroad Legislation.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CHARLES J. THOMPSON,
OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, November 11, 1919,

On the bill (H. R. 10453) to provide for the termination of Federal control of railroads and systems of transportation; to provide for the settlement of disputes between carriers and their employees; to further amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended, and for other purposes.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I am not a member of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee of the House, which, after months of impartial hearings given to all the interests throughout the land, prepared and presented to the House on Monday, November 10, H. R. 10453, known as the Esch bill. It provides for the termination of Federal control of railroads and systems of transportation, for the settlement of disputes between carriers and their employees, and carries with it various amendments to the commerce act of 1887.

There are 435 Members of the House of Representatives, and only 21 of them are members of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee. When this bill was introduced in the House on Monday it was with the understanding that it should be passed within a week; therefore, with the short time allowed for consideration, the general membership of the House, which is not on the committee and had nothing to do with the writing of the bill, have not had sufficient time to fully digest the subject matter of the bill and to fully acquaint themselves with all the details and ramifications of the proposed legislation; hence Members of the House must necessarily be guided largely by the judgment of the able chairman and the likewise able members of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, charged with the construction of this constructive legislation. This Congress was not elected to perpetuate war-time legislation or Government control or ownership of the basic industries of the United States of America. Consequently, in acting on this bill a majority of the Members will, no doubt, vote to pass the bill after amendments and discussions rather than obey the behests reaching them in the multiplicity of telegrams showered upon individual Congressmen directing them to vote and defeat the passage of the bill. The telegrams referred to have been received from employees connected with interests who do not personally understand the contents of the Esch bill and, perhaps, did not fully realize the nature of their demand upon Members of Congress. I shall vote to support the bill after it shall have been fully discussed and amended, and then am willing to trust the conference committee between the Senate and the House to finally whip into shape the final law upon the railroad subject, which I trust may be workable and acceptable to the general public and may receive the President's approval.

The sullen fires of revolution which were slumbering around about us and throughout our beloved land prior to the war have been accelerated since the presidential election of 1916 by the events of war and may now be seen flaming up throughout the land. In my opinion there are grave days just ahead of the Republic. These are times when patriotic Members of Congress should not truckle or weaken, but should consider well the principles upon which our Constitution and the Republic are grounded and stand firm for the general public interests and for the great unorganized masses of our citizens who do not flood Congress with requests for class legislation. It is my intention to listen carefully with an open mind to all the debates upon this question. At this time, however, I wish only to make a few general observations concerning railroads and railroad legislation. Political consideration should be avoided in such constructive legislation as we are now considering.

A brief review of railroad history in our country may be of interest. The first big trunk line of the United States was founded less than 100 years ago, in the year 1828. On the 4th of July of that year, the anniversary of the birth of this Nation, Charles Carroll, of Carrollton, the last surviving signer of the Declaration of Independence, laid the corner stone of the great Baltimore & Ohio Railroad. After endless and discouraging difficulties, and after vast and bold expenditures of money in this new enterprise, the success of which was by no means assured, the tracks of the Baltimore & Ohio finally reached Cumberland, Md., and a few years later the city of Wheeling on the Ohio River. Other railroads followed in rapid succession and quick transportation became an assured thing. Railroading in its early stages was a crude business. No railroad had the same gauge and the locomotives were clumsy affairs, incapable of making more than 20 miles an hour. But in those days it was considered reckless and dangerous speed.

Up to the year 1850, a period of 22 years, only 8,500 miles of railroad had been built. Now, there are over 240,000 miles in operation.

There is no question that our system of transportation has been the foundation of our progress and prosperity.

We now propose to return to the owners of the railroads the property temporarily taken from them through the exigencies of the Great War. It is just as well that we do so, for it has been evident even to a casual observer that the Government has not made what you can call a success of railroading.

Now, there have been in the past certain evils and irregularities in the management of the railroads by private parties, some of which had a harmful effect on the public. I believe in returning the railroads to full ownership by private parties, for only full ownership can be real ownership and carry with it full responsibility. But there is nothing to prevent us from enacting the legislation necessary to prevent a recurrence of the evils of the past. That is as far as we should go. To go beyond this would mean meddling with the management of the railroads; to fall short of it would mean a relapse into some of the corrupt practices of the past.

It has been the feed of demagogical politicians to denounce the railroads and to accuse them of all the sins in the decalogue. While I am willing to concede some of these sins, I am the last man in the country to believe that the great railroads and transportation systems of the United States rest on a rotten foundation. It has been charged that the railroads in some States have in the past owned and controlled the legislatures of those States. From later experiences I am not sure which is better for the country, to have the railroads own the politicians or the politicians own the railroads. Judging from the mess which the politicians have made of railroad management the argument seems to lean the other way. The very fact that Congress proposes to get rid of railroad management goes to show that the thinking men of the country have no taste for public ownership of the railroads.

There may be wrongs in the private management and ownership of railroads, but things have turned out far from right in the public ownership and management.

Let us look into the matter of fares and freight rates. The railroad business was carried on just like any other business in the country. Where population was sparse, the rates were naturally high. Where the population was dense, they were invariably lower. And with the rapid increase of the population came a gradual decline of passenger and freight rates all over the country.

This continued until the Interstate Commerce Commission was established. For a time the activities of this commission were limited in scope. The members, with a consciousness of greenness on railroad matters, were inclined to feel their way, but when they finally got into full swing they began the delicate task of fixing rates, and from that day on, especially since 1906, rates have gradually risen, trains have been discontinued, and the ability of railroads to borrow money in foreign countries has been reduced to a minimum. And the people had to dig down into their jeans and pay the bill.

There is probably no more expensive luxury the American people indulge in just now than your various commissions. They eat big holes into the pocket of the people, through which the dollar escapes with the same ease as the penny. As our imaginary evils increase our real commissions keep pace with them, and I have no doubt if we continue on these lines much further we shall appoint other commissions to regulate the original commissions, and so on ad infinitum.

I believe that concentration of undue power, especially in a railroad commission, paradoxical as it may seem, dissipates and dissolves power in that it takes it away from management of railroads by railroad experts; it takes it away from men of life-long training in specific railroad management; it prevents them from managing and successfully directing their own properties and places the management in the hands of a group or commission of nonexperts, any one of whom can not be held personally responsible for sins of omission or commission. There is, in my opinion, too great a tendency in this country of a government by bureaus and commissions, and too great a tendency to harass and handicap business, transportation, and commerce in developing the resources of the country. Preventive legislation for the evils that have existed, and that we know, should be enacted rather than legislation by fear to prevent imaginary bugaboos of the future that may never happen.

It seems to me that Congress is fully aware of what legislation is necessary to prevent in the future the past evils of railroad management. Having done this, it should limit the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission so that its activities will be confined to the enforcement of the preventive legislation of Congress. And to all such preventive legislation, I shall give my full support.

Having done that, I am willing to return ownership to the railroads in full. I am not afraid of the railroads. I am not afraid of any of the big business enterprises of my country. It is impossible to imagine that the wonderful success of our railroads and their marvelous development has been accomplished by corrupt practices, and it would be unpatriotic in me to cast such a slur upon any American enterprise. I am the last man to do that.

I am not a pessimist, like the old maid who went about with her nose in the air sniffing for bad smells. I am an optimist, like the jolly bachelor who opened the cologne bottle, or some other bottle, and reveled in an atmosphere of perfume.

So, likewise, let Congress close up the sewer trap on the bad smells by enacting the preventive legislation I suggested and then enjoy the dulciodorous aroma of business prosperity upon which our beloved country, let us hope, may soon enter.

Let us make the word "American" mean something. Let that word stand for enterprise, push, success, honesty, and integrity, so that even an American railroad may get its share of glory from that name.

The Railroad Bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. OSCAR E. KELLER,

OF MINNESOTA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, November 13, 1919.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, granted me November 13, I desire to submit the following: Much has been said of the merits and demerits of the bill that is before us, and I desire at this time to discuss certain features of the bill, as I see them, and to dwell on the general proposal itself, that of returning the railroads to private control.

The first question of vital interest to the people, in the event the railroads are returned, is section 205, which provides for the refunding of carriers' indebtedness to the United States.

The railroads are indebted to the Government, for expenditures chargeable to capital account, $775,551,000, from which amount it is proposed to deduct the amount the Government owes the railroads on their standard return, less certain exemptions, or approximately $415,016,000, leaving a balance of approximately $360,500,000, which sum is proposed to be funded by the railroads, giving their secured notes payable within 10 years in annual installments, bearing a certain rate of interest. The security to be given is first-mortgage liens on the property, or in the event these are not available, the best security the President can obtain. Now, the unfairness in this proposal lies in the fact that whatever the Government owes the railroads is to be paid in cash, or its equivalent, while the indebtedness of the railroads to the Government is to be paid by the notes of the carriers, running over a period of years. It is proposed to use the Treasury of the United States to provide the capital, in part at least, for the maintenance of the railroads under private ownership.

Section 207 provides for the guaranty to the carriers after the termination of Federal control. Under this section the United States guarantees the operating income of the railways for a period of six months after the termination of Federal control, such income to be equivalent to the average operating income of each railroad during the three-year period ending June 30, 1917, or, in other words, equal to their operating income during the three most prosperous years in railroad history. Should the operating income of any railroad in the United States, that has been under Government control, fall below this average, the Treasury of the United States will be dipped into for the difference. Should any of the above-mentioned railroads show a greater operating income than during the three-year period, such increase goes into the pockets of those who control that railroad, and not into the Treasury of the United States, as has been the procedure under Federal control. Again, it is proposed to use public funds to maintain private investments without a dollar of return to the public. Under this section the railroads are also provided with a working fund upon which they can draw for their operating expenses for a certain period after the termination of Government control.

The bill also provides that within two months after the return of the carriers application is to be made to the Interstate Commerce Commission for such increases in rates as are found necessary to maintain normal operating incomes during the six-month guaranty period. Now, this, in my estimation, is the little joker intended to deceive the public and Congress, to create the impression that if no application is made within the two months allowed that no increase can be applied for at any time in the future. It is quite clear, I hope, to the observing that this clause merely prevents them from applying for an increase during the balance of the six-month guaranty period should they neglect to make such application within two months after the termination of Federal control. As soon as the Government guaranty period expires there is nothing whatever to prevent the railroads from petitioning for a substantial increase in rates. In fact, notice has already been served, through the statement of Mr. Alfred P. Thom, general counsel, Association of Railway Executives, before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, that, in the event the railroads are returned to private control, if the operating expenses and the wage schedule remain stationary during the coming year, it will be absolutely necessary for them to have an increase of at least 25 per cent in rates to operate efficiently. The public has been camouflaged by the argument of economy of private operation, and in the next breath they are asked for an increase in rates. During the first six months of next year—always the poorest in operating income return—the railroads will be operated at a considerable loss. A petition will be presented the Interstate Commerce Commission at the end of this period for a substantial increase in rates, basing their request on the poor showing during this six-month period, and the chances are their request will be complied with. Then during the last six months of the year, when all the heavy traffic is carried, the railroads will enjoy a period of prosperity such as they have never enjoyed before. During this readjustment period the stock manipulator and the gambler will get in their good work. Statistics show that a large percentage of the common stock of the railroads is owned by the common people—the public. Because of the poor showing of the railroads during this first six-month period, the value of stocks will decline considerably and the public will unload their holdings. Toward the end of the period their value will be at its lowest, and the gambler and stock manipulator will step in and buy up everything in sight. As soon as an increase in rates is granted the roads will show substantial increases in operating income, which, together with the increased amount of business due to the hauling of crops, and so forth, will build up a neat surplus at the end of the year. Immediately stock values commence to rise, and after they have reached their former level or have gone even higher, the gambler and the stock manipulator commence to unload their stock onto the public once again, pocketing a neat profit on their investment. This has been the result in the past and this will be the result in the future, unless the Government retains control of the carriers and eliminates the speculative end of the game.

Title 3, disputes between carriers and their employees, is, in my estimation, the most unfair, discriminating, and objectionable feature of the entire bill. Its sole intent and purpose is to bind and shackle labor so completely that it will submissively bow to every command and demand of organized wealth, establishing a serfdom that pales into insignificance the chains of slavery that 50 or more years ago rocked the very foundation of this free and independent Government of ours; a serfdom that threatens to create a period of unrest and disorder which our country could hardly withstand heaped upon the strain and tension under which we are laboring, following our glorious effort in behalf of the struggling and oppressed peoples of the world. Are we, as Members of this Congress, going to fasten the chains of slavery upon our hard-working, thrifty millions who are the backbone of our transportation system, after spending billions in our fight to free the struggling masses of humanity from just such a condition?

Are we, as Members of this Congress, going to grant the interests every possible concession financially, in order to return the railroads of the country to them in as good or better condition than when we took them, and then turn the employees of these railroads over to these same interests, bound and shackled, subject to their will and pleasure? May the sun never dawn on the day that sees these industrious, devoted, trustworthy servants of the public so enslaved. May the quietness of eventide never follow the day that sees them deprived of that freedom that was theirs before the Government saw fit to assume control and management of our transportation system. Title 3 should be stricken from the bill in its entirety. Labor should be dealt with as liberally, as fairly, as justly as are the owners of the railroads. I can never commit myself to any procedure that will deny a man his free and independent rights guaranteed him under the Constitution of the United States. In the discussion on this labor section, the Congressman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] stated that there were during the war 6,000 strikes in effect, right at the time when the country was in need of every ounce of energy that could be put forth. This statement was made with the evident purpose of conveying the impression that all these strikes had been called by employees of the Railroad Administration, when, as a matter of absolute fact, not one single strike of railroad employees in any form was called during the period of the war. Not one single strike—and yet the gentleman from Indiana seeks to belittle the cause of the railroad employees by charging that they were connected with 6,000 strikes during the hour of our country's need. Any argument at all to effect the enslavement of the laboring class. I want to add, gentlemen, that the devotion to duty and the remarkable achievements of the men employed on our railroads during the dark days of war are worthy of the highest commendation.

The future development of our natural waterways—with which we have been so abundantly graced by a Divine Providence—is seriously threatened under this bill. Under its provisions the railroad companies are permitted to maintain boat lines on navigable streams in competition with companies in this particular business, with no safeguard to prevent the railroads from charging such low rates as to drive the competing companies from the field. This is the old, old system that has retarded the development of river navigation all these years, for after the railroads had succeeded in eliminating competition they, in turn, withdrew their boats, leaving all the freight to be handled over the railroads. It is high time that Congress, instead of allowing these lanes of transportation to lie idle, should foster and encourage their development as a necessary adjunct to our transportation system. Too much attention can not be directed to the importance of river navigation to our future development and prosperity. Only through the thorough utilization of our every natural resource will we, in the future, be enabled to maintain our commercial and our industrial supremacy.

The first 40 pages of the bill are devoted to the granting of financial assistance and power to the railroad interests at the expense of the public, and the last 40 pages are devoted solely to increasing the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission. I am decidedly opposed to the creation of an autocratic commission of any kind, and granting it such unlimited powers as are conferred upon the Interstate Commerce Commission by this bill. The rights of State commissions and their jurisdiction over affairs within their boundaries must be recognized. I am opposed to the transfer of the powers of the various State commissions in the handling of intrastate railroad matters to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

In conclusion, I am decidedly opposed to the return of the railroads at the present time. I believe the Government should continue to operate and manage the railroads for at least two years, at the end of which time I believe that a sufficiently creditable showing will have resulted as to convince even the most skeptical of the soundness of Government ownership of our greatest public utility. To pass final judgment upon Government ownership and operation of railroads by accepting as correct the many wild and weird statements that have emanated from every conceivable source would be the height of folly. Let us analyze the record of the past two years from the standpoint of actual facts and figures. Eliminating the most important and practical facts which led up to Government control, and judging the experience from the financial results in cold figures, at the end of the first year of operation there was a deficit of approximately $235,000,000, which was made up by an appropriation from the United States Treasury. At the end of the present year it is estimated that the deficit will approximate $300,000,000. The railroads under Government control have all been guaranteed a fair return on their capital stock, with no regard as to whether this stock was bona fide or not. Experts estimate that the value of the watered stock in our railroads approximates $8,000,000,000. The guaranteed return was paid on approximately $20,000,000,000 worth of stocks, watered and otherwise. According to figures available, operating revenues for 1918, under Government operation, increased 20.4 per cent over 1917, operating expenses increased 38.7 per cent, while freight rates increased approximately 25 per cent. Notwithstanding the fact that operating revenues increased in the ratio of 1 to 2 with operating expenses, the resulting deficit was but $235,000,000, which could easily have been wiped out by an increase of but 5 per cent in rates. According to reliable figures, the deficit for the first seven months of 1919 is approximately $216,000,000. In view of the fact that the first six months are always the poorest in point of revenue receipts, it can safely be assumed that the last five months of this year will practically wipe this deficit out or will reduce it to such an extent as to be negligible. This proves the assertion that the railroads can be operated efficiently and on a paying basis by the Government, and I am convinced that if Government operation is continued another year that a handsome surplus will have been realized to offset any past deficiencies.

What impelling motive, what incentive, what reason prompted the President to exercise his right of eminent domain in time of war in taking over the railroad system of the country? Was it because of the wonderful efficiency of our transportation system in the hands of private interests? Was it for the purpose of building up a huge surplus in the way of profits from this business? Immediately upon our entrance into the World War industry was called upon to double and treble its output; factory after factory was converted into a war-time industry; every available establishment was put to work manufacturing munitions of war and supplies for our soldiers. This immense production was thrown upon the railroads of our country, from every nook and corner of our land, to be transported to the seaboard and thence across the waters. Under private management, due to duplication of effort and absolutely inefficient supervision, a very serious tie-up of our transportation facilities resulted. It immediately became necessary for the Government to step in and untangle the knot after the railroad officials had failed in their effort to provide a remedy. The only solution was Government operation. The President arose to the emergency, issued the order which placed our transportation system under his jurisdiction, created the United States Railroad Administration, and in a short time had the system working to perfection.

There was little or no interruption in the process of delivering the necessary supplies and equipment to the boys in France. Of course there was a deficiency at the end of the first year of operation. But if this deficiency is to be measured against the saving that resulted in the expedition of the necessities of war to the front, thus resulting in the speedy termination of the war, the people of this United States would not have offered a word of objection had the amount been tenfold as great as it was. During the trying days attendant upon the prosecution of the war, time did not permit us to relax in our efforts to adjust the rates on our railroads in order to meet every cent of operating cost. This deficit can be rightfully charged to the cost of carrying on the war. How much more it would have cost us under private management in time, in money, and in lives must necessarily rest in our imaginations, for this would be difficult, indeed, to ascertain. To our wonderfully efficient handling of the railroad situation must be accorded in no small degree the success which our armies attained at the front. How much greater will be the benefits to be derived from the efficient management and operation of our transportation system during times of peace to the future development and prosperity of our land? Let us retain the railroads for at least two years and give our Government a fair and just opportunity to prove that only through Federal control and operation can the maximum of efficiency and the greatest amount of good be derived from our greatest public utility. Let us show by a fair trial that we are willing and anxious to place the responsibility for this public service in the hands of those who are best qualified to render such public service. If at the end of the two-year period it is found that the railroads can be operated most efficiently and more economically under private control, by all means let us return them; but if it is conclusively shown that Government operation and control is essential to the public welfare in time of peace, as it was in time of war, it will be our bounden duty, as representatives of the people, to purchase the railroads and operate them in the public interest. I am ready and willing to assume my share of the responsibility in this matter.

The Railroad Bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN M. ROBSION,

OF KENTUCKY.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, November 17, 1919.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, when the war came on, and during the war with the Central Powers, the railroad, ship, and wire lines of the country were taken over by the Government. Soon after the armistice was signed the question came up as to what disposition should be done with the railroad, ship, and wire lines. President Wilson announced that they should be returned to their owners, but he offered no plans to guide the Congress in these matters. In fact, he announced that he had no solution for the railroad problem. The President called the Congress into extraordinary session on the 19th day of May, 1919, and in his message to Congress he announced that the railroad, ship, and wire lines should be returned to their owners, but he again failed to offer any suggestions or plans to the Congress. The President has since announced that even though Congress took no action he would return the railroads to their owners by January 1, 1920. Director General Hines takes the same position. So, therefore, it is up to Congress to take action on this important question.

During the short time that the wires were under the control of the Government Postmaster General Burleson and the employees of the wire lines were in a constant uproar. The Government lost over $14,000,000 in this experiment. The Republican Congress in August of this year by appropriate legislation returned the wires to their owners and the confusion and the discord among the employees ceased. Some time ago, through the action of the Republicans, the House returned the ships to their owners. This bill provides for the return of the railroads to their owners. The railroad question is the most far-reaching question that has or will come before the Sixty-sixth Congress. The railroads carry the commerce of factory, mine, forest, and field. It is through the railroads of the country that all of us are clothed, fed, and warmed. The railroads directly affect every industry, business, and profession, as well as every man, woman, and child in the Nation. The Nation can no more thrive without a vigorous, healthy, and prosperous railroad system than the body can thrive without a healthy and active blood circulation. The railroads are to the commerce and business of the Nation what the veins and arteries are to the human body. In the consideration of this important question three groups are involved, to wit, the owners of the railroads, the employees of the railroads, and the general public. We must look to the rights of all three groups and have but one purpose in mind, and that is to work out a plan that will give a square deal to all.

LEGISLATION NOW NECESSARY.

In building up the great railroad systems of the country it was necessary for the owners to expend more than $18,000,000,000. It also required years of training and experience for the employees. Government control in a way disorganized the whole system, as well as the plans for operation. Under Government control the various systems have been in a way united; the rates have been changed as well as the plans of operation. The Government has spent hundreds of millions in permanent improvements. It owes to the owners hundreds of millions for the use of the railroads. Government control has shown many defects, while at the same time we have seen many good results from joint operation, joint use of terminals, pooling of equipment, and coordination along other lines. If the railroads should be returned by the President without legislation, the railroads would return to the old rates, and this would force them to cut down the wages of the employees, and it would also bring about endless confusion. This action on the part of the President might wreck the railroads of the country and at the same time prove disastrous to the workmen. Action by Congress is absolutely necessary. We can not dodge this great problem. We must take hold of it and solve it. The question uppermost in the minds of the American people in November, 1918, was the question of reconstruction. The American people believed that a Republican Congress would and could solve the great problems of reconstruction.

MANY PLANS PROPOSED.

Many plans have been proposed as the solution for this problem. Among the more notable were the Esch plan, Warfield plan, Railway Executive plan, Transportation Conference plan, Citizens' National Railroad League plan, the Plumb plan, and many others less pretentious in purpose and scope.

The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, that had charge of the railroad legislation, began taking evidence early in the summer and continued almost daily until about the 1st of October. Every person, firm, committee, organization, as well as the railroad brotherhoods, were given an opportunity to be heard and to explain their views on this question. The committee, after hearing the plans and solutions of all parties at interest, reported to the House the now pending bill. No one plan was adopted in full. This bill undertakes to adopt the best from all of the plans. I desire to congratulate the distinguished chairman and the members of this committee for the information that they have brought to the Congress and to express my appreciation for their earnest, effective, and honest efforts.

THE PLUMB PLAN.

The railroad brotherhoods put forward the Plumb plan. This plan proposes that the Government buy the railroads and turn them over to the railroad workers of the country and let them operate them, and after the payment of all wages and expenses, if any profit should be made, they were to divide this profit with the Government. A careful poll of all classes of citizens of the country discloses that nearly 90 per cent of the American people are opposed to the Plumb plan. So far as it has been disclosed, no Member of Congress favored the Plumb plan. Mr. SIMS, of Tennessee, introduced the Plumb plan, but he made it clear that it was not his bill, and that he was doing this by request.

The objections urged to the Plumb plan are that our country is now in debt more than $20,000,000,000, and to buy the railroads we would have to go in debt $18,000,000,000 more, and under the Plumb plan, in case of loss, the loss would have to be paid by the taxpayers of the Nation. Again, if the Government should buy the railroads and turn them over to the railroad workers, the coal miners, the steel workers, the telegraph and telephone workers, and the steamship workers of the Nation would have the same right to ask the Government to buy up these industries and turn them over to the workers on the same terms. We can see that the Plumb plan is not at this time the plan to be adopted in this country. Some of the other plans went as far to the extreme the other way. So Congress must take a middle ground. We must take into consideration all of the people in solving this great problem.

PRESIDENT WILSON OPPOSED TO GOVERNMENT CONTROL.

I am convinced that some few Democrats in the House are trying to reap some political advantage in this matter. They are simply playing politics. President Wilson, who controls the Democratic Party, has announced positively that he would return the railroads to their owners by January 1, 1920. He demands that the railroads be returned to their owners. The Democratic administration, as well as Director General Hines, backs up the President in this move. Not a single Member of Congress on the Democratic side has made a speech in favor of Government control of the railroads. Not one of them will go on record with voting for Government control of railroads. Some of them will vote against this bill, but they will place it on other grounds. Mr. CLAUDE KITCHIN, a strong Democratic leader, opposes the Anderson amendment, adopted in the interest of the railroad workers. No Democrat has offered any amendment or voted in favor of extending railroad control to 1921. The Democratic administration and Democratic Party have made such a "mess" in operating the railroads of the country that they are very anxious to get them off of their hands. The Republicans are opposed to turning the railroads back without proper legislation, and in this bill we are endeavoring to do that thing. We want the workers protected as well as the railroad owners and the public.

GOVERNMENT CONTROL COSTLY EXPERIMENT.

When the Government took over the railroads freight and passenger rates were greatly increased. This increase has cost the American people about two and a half billions of dollars. In addition to this, in order to take care of the loss, Congress has appropriated out of the Treasury—that is, out of the taxpayers' pockets of the country—$1,250,000,000, but Hon. Swagar Sherley, Director of Finance of the Railroads, in a recent letter to Congress, says that Congress will have to appropriate about $350,000,000 more to cover the remainder of the loss. So that, over and above the increase of rates, there will have to come out of the pockets of the taxpayers of the country more than one and one-half billions of dollars, and the total expense to the American people under Government control, over and above private control before the war, is about $4,000,000,000. That is about $40 for every man, woman, and child of America.

The Democratic administration says this is due to the increase in wages, and undertakes to blame this condition on the railroad workers of the country. This is not true. I am advised that the increase in all of the wages did not amount to as much as $1,000,000,000. The increase in the passenger and freight rates brought in over $2,000,000,000. What has become of the other $3,000,000,000? The railroad workers got no part of this. The Democratic administration at Washington showed extravagance, waste, and incompetency in the operation of the railroads as well as in practically every other thing that they have undertaken since they have been in control. The above figures do not include what has been expended upon permanent improvements on the railroads. All of the permanent improvements have been charged up to the owners. We might add here that in every country of the world that has undertaken Government control of railroads we have found that the expense to the shippers and public has been greater and the wages paid less than under private control in the United States.

It is really the unanimous view of Congress that the railroads ought to be returned to their owners with proper safeguards for the rights of the workers and the public.

RAILROADS AND WORKERS PROTECTED.

Materials are high; the cost of living is high. The workers' wages must be high. The man who receives $10 per day now is in no better shape than he was with $4 per day before the war. Five dollars per day now is not worth any more than $2 per day before the war. There can be no reduction of wages until there is a reduction in the cost of living. Congress has passed all necessary laws against profiteering and food hoarders. Billions are being collected from the American people in the way of taxes. These taxes indirectly come on all of the articles of consumption. Suits of clothes now have ten and fifteen dollars of taxes in them. Shoes have from two to five dollars of taxes in them. We must get back to economy in administering the affairs of the Government.

In order that there might not be any excuse for the reduction of the workers' wages, this bill provides that the present freight and passenger rates shall remain the same until the Interstate Commerce Commission shall have time to study the situation and fix rates that are fair and reasonable. It also provides a revolving fund of $250,000,000, which may be loaned to the weak and needy railroads with good security at 6 per cent interest to enable the weaker lines to get on their feet. Any drastic measures taken against the railroads at this time would reflect themselves upon the workers and hurt the workers of the country as well as cripple the commerce of the country. I feel that the workers under this law will be served as well as, if not better than, under Government control. The railroads under this law will have no excuse for undertaking to oppress or starve their employees.

WORKERS' PLAN OF MEDIATION AND CONCILIATION ADOPTED.

I have received a great many letters, telegrams, and resolutions urging me to oppose any antistrike provision in the railroad bill.

Some strikes have been ill-advised and some of the unions in the past have made mistakes. I think men should have the right to organize to secure their just demands in any legal manner. I am opposed to any antistrike law. The differences between capital and labor can not be settled by force. I mean there can be no final and just settlement by force either on the part of capital, labor, or the Government. The strike should never be restorted to if the workers can secure their rights in any other legal manner. I feel that it would have a bad effect on the social and industrial life of the Nation for us to say that men should not strike or for us to attempt to use force in the settlement of these important questions. I firmly believe that this method will breed I. W. W.ism and Bolshevism. We get best results by mutual confidence, respect, and good will. I therefore voted against the Webster antistrike amendment, and I favor the Anderson amendment and voted for it and hope the Members of the House will support it on the final passage of this bill. The Anderson amendment adopts the railroad workers' plan for the settlement of differences between the workers and the railroads. The railroads of America are organized into 14 brotherhoods. Every branch of railroad work is organized. This bill recognizes the 14 brotherhoods. In this plan of mediation and conciliation they are recognized. It has been said on the floor of the House that the railroad men have never broken a contract with their employers. They have had no general strike since 1894. I sincerely trust that under the plan adopted by us in this bill there will be no breaking of contracts in the future and no strike. The railroad boys must always remember that the American people will be behind them in any just demand, and when the American people are not behind them they should look into their proposition and try to get in line with the American people. The American people want a square deal.

WORKERS FAITHFUL AND COMPETENT.

There is no relation of life in which we display so much faith as we do in our relation to the railroad workers of America. I frequently get on the train here in Washington and go to my home in Barbourville, Ky. I am not personally acquainted with any of the track workers, road supervisors, telegraph operators, train dispatchers, or the trainmen. I take my seat in the train feeling perfectly safe. I give no attention to the condition of the tracks, the cars, or the movement of the train. I assume and have faith that the trackmen have made a safe track for our train. I have faith that the train dispatchers have issued the proper orders and the telegraph operators have received the orders and turned them over to the trainmen. I assume that the engineer and conductor know the contents of these orders and will carry them out. I assume that every employee along the line has done his duty. I am sure that the engineer and fireman will not go to sleep. I go to bed on the train with no more thought of danger than if I were in my own home. The many hundreds of railroad workers involved in this trip have all done their full duty, and I arrive safe and sound at my destination. No greater faith is shown in any of our other relations of life. We have built up the finest system of railroads in the world and we have the most intelligent and the best trained railroad men in the world to operate them.

WORKERS ARE PATRIOTIC.

I have heard a few men on the floor of this House undertake to denounce the railroad workers and the unions in general. The activities of the I. W. W. and the Bolsheviki in this country have been made the basis of these attacks. No one is more bitter in his denunciation or outspoken in his contempt for the I. W. W. and Bolsheviki than I am. They have but one purpose, and that is to destroy this Government. As I understand it, no I. W. W. or Bolsheviki can become a member of the miner's union or the railroad union if his views are known. We have thousands of union miners and union railroad men in my district. There are no foreigners among them. They are 100 per cent Americans. The railroad men for whom we are undertaking to legislate in this bill in my district are intelligent, law-abiding, and loyal American citizens. They take an active and large part in the industrial, educational, and social life of their communities. Thousands of these railroad and mine workers went overseas and into the camps of this country and many of them gave their lives to help win the war. I doubt if there can scarcely be found a railroad or mine worker in my district that did not buy one or more Liberty bonds and did not give generously to the support of the Red Cross and other war activities. Thousands of these boys have returned and taken up their work in the mines and on the railroads. They know that this is the best country on earth and will help to defend it and preserve it. It is true, no doubt, that the I. W. W. and the Bolsheviki, in sections of this country where there is a large foreign element, have taken possession of some of the unions in order to further their plans to destroy this Government. They have in this way done the cause of labor a very great injustice. Labor can do its cause no greater service than to kick out every man who is not loyal to this Government and who is not 100 per cent American, and refuse to take in any man unless he is loyal to our country and our flag. The American people will not back any union or any set of men who would overturn the institutions of this country and make of it a second Russia. I know of no labor organization in the country that is composed of men of higher intelligence or more loyal to the country than the railroad workers of America. I want this Congress to deal with them as intelligent and loyal Americans. We have faith in their fidelity to duty and in their mechanical skill to carry us safely over the country. Let us also have faith in their loyalty and devotion to this country. The owners are loyal and the workers are loyal, and therefore I apprehend no danger to the country or to the railroads when they are returned with the plan of mediation and conciliation which the workers have offered and which we are adopting to settle their disputes. The railroad boys must know, and I am sure that they do realize, that this is a big country and that all of us are workers, and any man engaged in honest service, let him be miner, farmer, factory man, lawyer, doctor, teacher, or the owner of the railroads, is a part of our great country and entitled to a square deal, and no man however great or rich he may be is entitled to any more, and no man however small he may be should receive any less than a square deal.

DIVISION OF RATES AND POOLING OF CARS AND EQUIPMENT.

Under the old law it was unlawful for railroads to pool their cars and equipment and it was difficult to obtain a fair division of through rates among two or more railroads. Under Government control we learned the tremendous advantage in the pooling of cars and equipment. This will result in great advantage both to the railroads and to the public. Without this plan some sections of the country have a surplus of cars while other sections have a shortage of cars, and thousands of empty cars would be returned when they could be filled on their homeward trip. This will enable the Interstate Commerce Commission to provide such regulations as will furnish ample car supply to the sections of the country as their necessities may arise. Under the old law the trunk lines often crowd out and impoverish the short lines on the question of the division of rates. This bill relieves this situation but not as fully as I should like to see it.

ADEQUATE AND SAFE CAR SERVICE.

I am strongly in favor of the provision in this bill which gives to the Interstate Commerce Commission the power to force the railroads of the country to provide safe and adequate car service, not only to the shippers along their lines but to the short-line railroads. We have a great trunk-line railroad running through my district, and we also have a number of short-line railroads that are "feeders" for this trunk line. These short-line roads serve some very rich coal-producing and timber sections. They can own but little equipment in the way of cars. In the past there has been a great deal of discrimination of the railroads against shippers on the same line and against shippers on the short-line roads. Under this bill there must be no discrimination, and the Interstate Commerce Commission can require the trunk-line railroads to furnish adequate and safe car service to all of its customers alike, and furnish the short-line railroads with cars for shipments on their lines. I hope this provision will be adopted.

JOINT USE OF TERMINALS.

Under the old law one railroad could get possession of an important terminal point and shut out other railroads. This bill provides that the Interstate Commerce Commission may require the joint use of any terminal by two or more railroads on such terms as may be just and equitable. We learned the advantages to the public of this provision fully during Government control. I think that Congress should adopt this provision.

LONG AND SHORT HAUL.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] has introduced an amendment to this bill which in effect destroys the entire rate and haulage system of the country. If this amendment is adopted, it will practically destroy the coal industry of Kentucky and Tennessee. I have a great many protests both from the miners and the operators in Kentucky and Tennessee against this provision, which is otherwise known, as I understand it, as the Poindexter bill. I would not be doing my duty to the coal industry of my district if I did not urge the Members of this House with all of the earnestness at my command to defeat the Sims amendment.

PROTECTS THE INVESTOR AND PUBLIC.

The Interstate Commerce Commission has been given increased powers under this bill, to the end that the rights of the railroad and the public may both be protected. Perhaps no department of the Government has given more universal satisfaction than the Interstate Commerce Commission. This bill not only gives them power to regulate rates but also gives them the power to determine the character of equipment used to protect the workers and the public. It gives them power to prevent the removal of any railroad. Towns and communities have heretofore been built up along railroads, and then the railroad would arbitrarily remove its lines. This can not be done under this bill. Again, no stocks, bonds, or other securities can be issued by any railroad—that is, interstate railroad—without the consent of this commission.

In the past the public has been imposed upon by speculators and promoters in issuing large blocks of stock and other securities to themselves, and in this way wrecking some of the great railroad systems of the country and thousands of innocent investors have been ruined. The country can not get along without the railroads. No railroad can be wrecked without the public in the long run bearing the loss. If this bill becomes a law the day of watered railroad stocks is over. The railroads must have fair returns upon their investments. In order to determine this we must know that their investment is fair and that they are not getting returns on a lot of watered stocks. In other words, the Interstate Commerce Commission has general supervision of the railroads of the country, but they will not run the railroads of the country. It is up to this commission to see that the roads and the public receive a square deal.

NO HELP FROM THE PRESIDENT.

I am not satisfied with all of the provisions of this bill. I presume that it would be impossible to frame a bill that would suit everybody in all particulars. Some say that the bill is too liberal to the railroads in the way of rates, guaranties, and loans for the next few months. The railroads must have an opportunity to get on their feet. Others say that we have been too liberal with labor in adopting the workers plans to settle disputes. Others say that we have given the Interstate Commerce Commission too much power. We must not forget that this is a very big question, the country is in an unsettled state, and the most that we can hope for is to work out a plan that will serve the American people best, and if the law has defects to remedy these defects as time and experience may disclose. It is a source of regret to all of us that we did not have and could not have the benefit of the counsel and the advice of the President of the United States on this the greatest of questions. Soon after the armistice was signed the President began to devote his energies to the so-called league of nations, and he pursued this matter with so much persistency that he is physically unable to do anything now in helping Congress. We have tried hard to understand why the President should devote so much time in an effort to give Great Britain and her colonies six votes to our one; to guarantee the boundary lines of the 23 nations in the league of nations; to give these foreign countries the power to declare war for us, to say how big our Army and Navy should be, to say how many of our boys and ships should be furnished to police the world, to engage in every war, brawl, and quarrel of Europe and Asia, and to give them the right to pass upon questions of commerce and immigration for our country and take all of these powers away from the Congress of the United States and the American people. I am glad that a number of great Democrats have joined with the Republicans and adopted reservations that will cut out all of this stuff and protect the American people. The President is going against the advice of every President of this country from Washington down to the present. The President says that these Democrats and Republicans have cut the heart out of the league of nations and have rendered it worthless. It is a matter of great regret that he has spent so much money and time on a thing that is worthless. How much better would it have been if the President should have devoted his energy and his time in helping to solve this great railroad question and the other great problems of reconstruction. In the present condition of our country we need to devote all of our powers of mind and our resources in the building up of our own country and placing our own institutions upon a sound and lasting basis.

If this railroad bill is not all that it ought to be, neither the President nor his party can blame the Republicans. The President could have been of service to us and the country if he had not been busy undertaking to run the affairs of all the other nations of the world.

Where Our Heroes Triumphed—A Visit to the Battle Fields of Europe.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. FREDERICK C. HICKS,

OF NEW YORK,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, November 18, 1919.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, having spoken already at some length of my experience on the battle fronts, I hesitate to ask the indulgence of Congress for a similar purpose and only do so in order to refer to some of the post-war conditions.

We left New York July 13, 1919, on the U. S. S. Mt. Vernon, the "gold ship," formerly the North German Lloyd liner Kronprinzessin Cecilie. You will recall that when war was declared she was on her way to Germany with a consignment of nearly $2,000,000 in gold. Her owners sent a wireless ordering her to return to America, and with less than four hours' run of coal in her bunkers the vessel reached Bar Harbor. Later she was interned at Boston, and on July 28, 1917, was placed in commission as a transport under the American flag. In September, 1918, when a short distance out from Brest, the ship was torpedoed but by the skillful seamanship of her captain and officers and the heroic action of the crew she reached port in safety. The explosion killed 36 men, and it was my sad privilege to attend the funeral of these sailors as they lay in state at Brest, their coffins draped in the flag for which they had given their lives.

Capt. Dismukes, commander of the Mt. Vernon, related to me many instances of this eventful trip that displayed the most exalted courage on the part of the men under his command. I want to refer to one very curious occurrence that took place in the fireroom, at which point the torpedo struck. One fireman was blown through a doorway and by the force of the air and water was driven up a ventilator shaft. Caught by a turn in the pipe, a section of the ventilator had to be cut away before he could be removed, but he escaped without serious injury. Another incident occurred when the captain inspected the ship immediately after the explosion. Going into the galley, which was located directly above the fireroom, he asked a colored steward what had happened in his department. Johnson replied, "Yas, sah; I was heah when the torpedo busted." "Well, what happened?" asked the captain. "Well, sah, Captain, all dese heah pots and kittles wat you see jest riz right up to de ceilin." "Well, what happened when they came down?" "I doan know, sah; I wasn't heah when dey come down."

Landing in Brest on July 21, we were met by representatives of the Navy, and I was joined by my two colleagues, Congressmen SLEMP, of Virginia, and ECHOLS, of West Virginia, who were to be my congenial companions for the remainder of the trip.

The history of Brest runs back many centuries. The Romans, early in their conquest of Gaul, established here a trading post to facilitate commerce with Great Britain in the procurement of tin. Although well situated, the town is not especially interesting. It boasts of an ancient castle and the houses are extremely quaint and old-fashioned. It possesses a wonderful harbor, one of the finest in Europe, but, as the French have always used this port as a naval station, little commercial activity is in evidence. A few miles from the town are barracks built by Napoleon. These were loaned us and became the famous camp of Pontanezen, additions being made in order to accommodate many thousands of men. Hundreds of our soldiers were at the camp awaiting embarkation to the United States. Everyone was anxious to get home, and there were no regrets in leaving.

This part of France is Brittany, and, strange to say, many of the native inhabitants do not speak French, still using the old Breton language. They are a sturdy lot of people, engaged in fishing and agriculture. Some of the best seamen enlisted for the submarine warfare came from these coast towns. The women wear white lace caps, and each community has its distinctive style. The men, as if to balance this extravagance, wear wooden shoes. They also wear broad-brimmed black velvet hats, with a streamer hanging down the back. Their fields are inclosed, as it were, by earthen embankments, which materially reduces the cultivable land.

High prices in France present a most serious problem, with no signs of a downward tendency. In Brest we were able to obtain a very good dinner for about a dollar, and outside of Paris food prices are somewhat less than they are in the United States. They have no sugar, using for a substitute saccharine, a coal tar product. They are also short of fats, butter, and dairy products generally. The price of everything in Paris is abnormally high, and no wonder our soldiers complained. An ordinary dinner costs from three to four dollars. France is greatly aroused over the high cost of living, and a short time ago, becoming impatient, forced the minister of agriculture to resign, had profiteers arrested, then organized price committees in an effort to bring about a normal adjustment. The effort seems to be directed more against the middleman than against the producer.

There has been a great deal of complaint on the part of our boys over their treatment by the French, and I can not blame them. Without question, they were charged exorbitantly for everything they purchased, and were not accorded the generous treatment they had expected. Although France without doubt has a high and sincere admiration for America and is deeply grateful for what we did, yet she failed to meet the situation in that chivalric spirit our boys had every reason to anticipate. After the armistice a certain unmistakable coolness developed, which our soldiers naturally resented. The French authorities were anxious to have our troops—those not needed to protect their frontier—returned to the United States. I will not give all the reasons advanced for this, simply stating that it was due to the fear of a further enhancement of prices.

France is so different in her manners and customs, it was difficult for our boys to understand the people with whom and for whom they fought. The French are naturally saving and thrifty and not overly sanitary in their domestic economics. Most of the houses, although solidly and firmly built, are lacking in nearly all modern conveniences, bathrooms and telephones being conspicuous by their absence. Their business methods, too, were a shock to the American soldier, who was accustomed to more progressive systems. It was perfectly astonishing to the French the manner in which we handled the great problems of transportation and storage. Many buildings the French thought impossible of construction within six months we built in as many weeks. The resourcefulness and rapidity with which the Americans solved their problems was a constant source of wonder to the average Frenchman, unaccustomed to the pace of the twentieth century.

I want to give an illustration of our business methods in France which was a revelation. The army of occupation, experiencing great trouble in exchanging money, determined to start a bank under American supervision. A Maj. Morris was placed in charge. Receiving his orders at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, he at once telephoned Army headquarters, 150 miles away, asking that a large sum of German money be ready for him at once. Then, taking an airplane, he made the flight to headquarters, obtained the money, and returned by train that same night. At 9 o'clock the next morning the bank was opened for business.

Paris to Brussels is a night's travel. The traffic is so heavy that it is almost impossible to board the trains, and every trip witnesses some persons compelled to stand during the eight-hour journey. The summer, so far, has been unusually wet and cold, but the crops in both France and Belgium look well, and the harvests should be bountiful. In speaking of food supplies, however, one should always remember that, owing to the lack of man power, the land for four years has not been cultivated to its maximum. As both the French and Belgian Armies are at present only partially demobilized, this year's harvests will be limited.

In Brussels we found few traces of the German occupation, and, in fact, outside of Louvain and the frontier cities, there is little visible destruction until one comes to the actual war zone. In the occupied part of Belgium the Germans inflicted great hardship by seizing all the cattle, horses, hogs, and so forth, and in removing machinery and tools from factories, which were transported to Germany.

In this act of vandalism the Germans exercised their usual methodical methods—numbering each piece, cataloguing every factory dismantled, and listing the places in Germany where the machine was sent. By consulting these lists it is now possible to ascertain the location of practically all of the property, and the work of securing the machinery is greatly simplified. Under the peace terms this machinery must be returned, and the Government of Germany has obligated itself to collect the purloined articles and return them to their owners. In one factory we visited, 97 per cent of the machinery had been removed and 4 per cent had up to date been returned. This factory before the war employed 12,000 men in the manufacture of locomotives and other heavy machinery. Factory after factory has been denuded of machinery, and this loss is a double one, for not only does it retard the industrial development of the country but deprives the Belgians of employment. Of the industrial situation I will speak later.

At first the Germans gave receipts for the food and labor commandeered, but later paid in marks, compelling the Belgians to accept them at a higher figure than they were worth. To prevent their own currency from being deranged by this influx of marks, the Belgian Government exchanged marks for francs, and the treasury now has on hand 6,000,000 marks, worth about 3 cents each.

From Brussels, a city that undoubtedly prospered from German occupation, for it was here that the officers of the army spent their money, we went to Liege, on the frontier of Germany, the first city to receive the shock of the invading hosts. We passed through Louvain, in the occupied area, which at the outbreak of war suffered severely from the German Army. To intimidate the Belgians this prosperous city was subjected to many acts of terrorism. The wonderful library, containing thousands of rare books and priceless manuscripts, was burned, as well as many private houses. The great cathedral was set on fire, and before the flames could be extinguished the roof, part of the spire, several chapels, and much of the interior were destroyed. The helpless people were robbed and their property transported to Germany. Hundreds of them were driven from their homes, sent across the Rhine, and compelled to work in practical slavery.

The mayor of the city related many incidents of cruelty and injustice. I will recall only one. A farmer owning 12 pigs was told to take these pigs to the city, where he would receive payment for them. He protested that he had no wagons. "Borrow them," said the officer; "if you disobey the order you will be imprisoned." The poor farmer found a wagon, loaded his hogs, and started for the city. On the way he was stopped by some soldiers, who seized 2 of the pigs and turned loose the remainder. After long delay the farmer secured 8 of the pigs and proceeded to his destination. On arriving, 12 pigs were demanded of him. He protested and told his story. The officer laughed at him and said, "All right; give me the names of the soldiers." This, of course, the man could not do. "Then," said the official, "you insult the uniform of the Kaiser by accusing his soldiers of theft." The farmer was fined for disobeying his orders, the fine being exactly the price paid for the 8 hogs delivered. This transaction balanced the books of the officer but left the man without either his pigs or his money.

The farming country we passed through on our way to Liege showed no indication of reduction of production. The land may not have been cultivated to its maximum during the war, yet there were no fallow tracts and the crops were in good condition.

Liege in 1914 was surrounded by a cordon of forts, constructed on the Brialmont system, with guns mounted in heavy-armored revolving turrets. All but one of these fortifications was destroyed under German artillery attacks in those grim days of August five years ago. For 12 days the heroic defenders of their homeland held back the imperial army—12 days of incalculable value, for by this unexpected delay France was given time to prepare and England was enabled to mobilize her troops. Although the invasion of Belgium may have been expedient from the military standpoint, it was a colossal blunder politically, for by that action of treaty violation Germany arrayed the world against her. The defense of Liege, the staying of the great war machine of Germany by a mere handful, was one of the sublime acts of the war.

We crossed the Meuse River on a bridge built by the Germans, a bridge which has echoed the marching tread of untold thousands. On the heights above, in a little cemetery, lie those who fell in the initial assault upon Liege. Black-gowned women and sorrowing children were placing flowers on the tomb of husband, son, perhaps father. With profound reverence we bowed our heads before the graves of those who had answered the call of duty and of country. On each marble slab was the picture of the fallen hero and the date, August, 1914. How long ago that seems; how remote from to-day! What mighty changes have taken place since those men poured out their blood! Sleep on, you noble dead; your lives were not rendered in vain!

Returning to Brussels, we started for Zeebrugge, passing on the way through Bruges. This medieval city, once a thriving seaport—"The Venice of the North"—is the terminus of two canals running from the North Sea. It was used by the Germans as a submarine base, great shops having been erected for the repair of submarines that were brought inland through the canals.

At Zeebrugge the submarines entered or left the sea, and here in the spring of 1917 the most spectacular naval exploit of the war took place. A great concrete breakwater, a mile in length, completed just before the war, forms a harbor around the mouth of the canal. On this mole and upon the sand dunes along the coast the Germans had mounted heavy guns, which in their opinion rendered the harbor impregnable to assault. On a cloudy night the British made a surprise attack. Under cover of darkness a warship approached the mole upon which several companies of German soldiers were garrisoned. At the same time a submarine loaded with T. N. T. made fast to the mole near its shore end. The little vessel was safely moored, and the crew, leaving in motor boats, was several hundred yards away before being discovered. A terrific fire concentrated upon them killed many of the daring seamen. Almost immediately the time fuze set off the explosion on the submarine, completely severing the breakwater, thus cutting off the Germans on the outer end of the mole. The British warship, raking the mole with machine guns, succeeded in landing an attacking force which overpowered the Germans, killing most of them outright, and the remainder, in trying to escape along the mole, were drowned as they attempted to cross the gap made by the submarine.

This assault, however, successful as it was, was not the objective of the expedition; it was intended to divert attention from the real purpose of blocking the canal. While the attack on the mole was in progress several ships loaded with concrete were proceeding directly into the harbor. Under cover of the confusion on the breakwater, two of the ships, escaping observation, entered the canal itself and were sunk by their crews in accordance with plan. Desperate as were their chances, the men escaped with few casualties. Although the canal was not rendered entirely useless, these "block" ships—which are still there—seriously handicapped the German operations from that time on.

From Zeebrugge, up and down the coast, the sand dunes are still lined with German guns flanked by wire entanglements. At Lange Boom, not far from Ostend, we came upon a huge German concrete emplacement, with its single 12-inch caliber gun still in place. In the construction of this gun mount 700 soldiers and 400 civilians were employed. Four electric motors were used in its operation. With a range of 28 miles and hurling projectiles weighing 1,800 pounds, this gun periodically shelled Dunkirk. To avoid detection of its location it was fired only at night.

This part of Belgium is Flemish and many of the inhabitants were supposed to sympathize with the German cause. To induce desertions from the Belgian Army, promises of substantial rewards were made by the German officials. The few who turned traitors are now meditating in Belgian prisons upon the chances of war. I was especially glad to visit Dixmude, for it was from the ruins of this once prosperous city that the Germans opened fire upon our party in 1917, when we were in the Belgian front-line trenches on the other side of the Yser. Earnest work is being done in Dixmude by the Belgian Government in cleaning out the débris preparatory to rebuilding. German prisoners, of whom there are some 600,000 in France and Belgium, are employed in this work, or at least pretext at work, for I doubt if they are 10 per cent efficient, and are scarcely worth their board and pay, small though it is.

Here in this war zone the terrain for miles is mutilated almost beyond belief. Everywhere are trenches, pill boxes, and observation posts, but no houses—all these have long since been pounded into dust—for we were traveling through a part of the battle fields which had witnessed some of the most terrific assaults of the conflict.

Upon this tortured land, where once throbbed the life of industry and echoed the laughter of children, armies had struggled, staggered, died as the reeling and bending lines, like waves of the sea, swept back and forth under the smashing charges and counter attacks of desperate, maddened men. Silence now reigns over the fearful wilderness where only a few months ago the roar of artillery, the whine of shells, and the crack of rifles mingled with the shrieks of the mangled and the moans of the dying, in an inferno of destruction. A tree here and there, shattered and broken, with branches torn and twisted, still stands, gaunt specter of the death which had swept across the plain.

Paschendale, formerly a town of 5,000 people, on whose heights the British established themselves in the fall of 1917, no longer exists, and it was necessary for our guide to point out the site, as everything has been leveled to the ground. Along the roads were squads of British soldiers guarding the German prisoners employed in leveling the ground and collecting whatever was of value for salvage. British grave battalions were there also, searching for the graves of their comrades, disinterring the bodies, and then reburying them in military cemeteries. Unfortunately, in some places it seems impossible to recover the dead. The forest of Houlhulst, for instance, the scene of heavy artillery duels, gas attacks, infantry charges, and hand-to-hand conflicts, is really a swampy jungle of twisted roots and thick underbrush. The marshy ground, strewn with all the wreckage of war, is pitted by innumerable shell holes filled with stagnant water, in which bodies of men lie in all stages of decomposition. Fever and pestilence lurk in the tangled masses. Fallen trees, wire entanglements, hidden traps, and unexploded mines render the poison-saturated earth too dangerous to be molested. Recovery of the bodies is not only well-nigh physically impossible, but any attempt is certain to be followed by heavy mortality of those engaged in the work. The only solution that offers seems to be the cremation by chemicals of the remains where they lie.

Just before reaching Ypres we passed through a "cemetery of tanks," where scores of these British machines lay, shapeless heaps of iron. When the Germans retreated last summer they placed in the roadway charges of T. N. T., which were exploded by the weight of the tanks passing over them. Having spoken of Ypres last winter, I will not burden you with a repetition. Ypres is and must always be a colossal graveyard of homes and churches, schoolhouses and shops; a dead city, yet a living monument to the frightfulness of war. It has been destroyed beyond all hope of restoration. A most pathetic incident—one of thousands, no doubt—came to me at Ypres. I met a young Australian, a giant in physique, a veteran who had fought through the war. He was "just having a look around," as he said, and was about to go home. He had come to say good-by to his chum, his boyhood pal, who had stood shoulder to shoulder with him in many a fight, but who now was sleeping the sleep of eternity. He had come from the grave and was completely unstrung. "Blathey me," he said, "but that's the hardest thing I ever did. I don't mind standing up against the Hun—I gave him more than I got—but to leave my old boy here all alone, that gets me," and the poor fellow who could face a machine gun without flinching broke down and sobbed like a child.

Ypres marks the center of four years of desperate fighting, and on all sides the scars are the silent witnesses of the struggle. On one side lies Messines Ridge, gained by the British at terrible cost, only to be lost in the drive of 1918, and beyond rises Mount Kimmel, where some of our boys won imperishable renown last year. This hill is some 600 feet high, or was until the allied artillery smashed off several yards of the top. Its high elevation made its possession of great strategic importance. In the German offensive in 1918 the British were forced to evacuate the hill, and the German Army, driving for the sea, surged past each flank. To prevent their enemies occupying this hill as an observation post British and French artillery pounded its crest night and day, as many as 20,000 shells falling upon the top each 24 hours. The view from the hill enables one to visualize the dogged endurance of the British soldier—endurance which cost the lives of thousands of her young manhood when they "were fighting with their backs to the wall." But they held and saved the day. A short distance west of Kimmel the ground rises to another hill, the last ridge which separated the Germans from the coastal plains. The capture of this hill would have meant in all probability the fall of Calais, and with it the ports on the Channel, involving as a sequence the withdrawal of the British Army from northwestern France and the serious crippling of Great Britain as an active participant in the war.

We were fortunate in meeting the owner of the property, who escorted us to the summit of the famous hill, from which we viewed the desolation spread out for miles around. The gentleman pointed out his estate of some 1,700 acres where once stood villages and farms. Not one house now stands, and much of the land will continue a desert for years to come. His own home, formerly a castle built in the Middle Ages, is a pile of broken brick, the encircling moat alone remaining. This Belgian, who had served in the artillery, was surveying his lands, dividing it into three classes—No. 1, the part which could be brought back to cultivation by filling up the trenches and shell holes; No. 2, the portion which was so badly torn up that the expense of restoration, even if possible, would be prohibitive; on this he planned to plant trees; No. 3, the land in condition between the other two. This he proposed to use for houses and for grazing purposes. Our car having broken down, with 8 miles separating us from the nearest hotel and with evening approaching, we asked our friend if he could take care of us for the night. "Oh, I wish I could," he said, "but you see the condition of things. I have only a bunk in a shack myself and there is not a spare bed within 8 miles." Fortunately, however, he secured for us an Army truck, which later landed us in Popperinge.

With all the tragedy there is also some humor. When the Germans swept into Belgium they issued an edict that all wine owned by Belgians must be reported, and sold whenever demanded, for 1 mark per bottle, irrespective of its value. For any evasion the penalty was confiscation of the liquor and a fine of 1 mark per bottle or imprisonment. We were told of an instance where a wealthy Belgian, possessed of some rare wine, concealed his supply in his cellar. Fearing its discovery, he hit upon the happy thought of secreting it in a near-by pond. Under cover of darkness, with the aid of a wheelbarrow, he gradually deposited his stock at the bottom of the pool. But his troubles were not ended. After the bottles had lain in the water a few days the labels soaked off and floated to the top, forming a white scum. Some German officers noticed the strange phenomenon and upon investigation discovered that some rare vintage was not far away.

They made inquiries and some one recalled having seen the Belgian and his wheelbarrow at work. On demanding an explanation the frightened Belgian at first denied all knowledge of the affair, but finally admitted he had placed a few bottles in the pond for cooling purposes. The officers pooh-poohed this, saying they would soon find out the truth. They put men at work and fished up 2,000 bottles. The Belgian was told that all this wine would be confiscated and he would be fined 2,000 marks or sent to prison. He was advised to proceed to the official in charge, and be prepared to pay his fine. Duly presenting himself, the magistrate stormed at him, "Pay at once or I will send you to prison. Here is the bill." The poor Belgian drew out his wallet and was about to count out the 2,000 marks, when the official thrust the bill before him. "Pay the 50 marks now or you will regret it." The astonished Belgian almost blurted out that it should be 2,000 marks, but fortunately he did not, and paying the 50 went away with his receipt. This is what had happened: The officers had turned in 50 bottles and had retained 1,950 for their own use; but the poor Belgian could say nothing; his wine was lost to him, and if he reported the matter it would mean the payment of 1,950 additional marks.

A peculiarity of the battle front here and one I had not noticed elsewhere was that in the back areas all of the roadside trees, although dead, were still standing. They had not been injured by shell fire and were free of gashes and broken limbs; even the withered leaves were still attached to the branches. My only explanation is that these trees were killed by poisonous gases and not by artillery.

Before leaving Belgium let me speak of her economic position. Twenty-nine thirtieths of Belgium has been in the hands of the Germans, and there is not a corner of the free portion that has not been bombarded. It is estimated roughly that the material damage alone amounts to more than $4,000,000,000, although it is a difficult question to determine. Practically all the important factories, except those owned by German interests, have been robbed of their machinery and materials. In many of these factories, in the textile industry, for instance, the Germans stole the boilers, the engines, and even the belting. From others they took lathes. From still others they took yard locomotives. And in many cases they took items as small as brass door knobs. Frequently they demolished factories after stripping them, and in some cases actually blew to pieces the very foundations of factories and homes. They completely demolished more than 50,000 homes, 1,366 miles of railroad track, and 350 bridges and embankments. They took altogether more than 2,400 locomotives and more than 90,000 cars. They lifted out, in some cases, whole interurban lines, pulling down the trolleys and moving them, tearing up the rails and taking away the rolling stock, some of which they sent to Russia. Thousands of cattle, horses, and hogs were shipped into Germany and wide stretches of agricultural lands were made desolate. The heaviest loss was the destruction of iron foundries to the extent of $213.000,000, of steel and manufacturing plants in excess of $314,000,000, and of textile factories valued at over $242,000.000. The coal mines have suffered relatively little. They have hardly been affected except by measures of a general character. Most of them have been exploited, but not to any large extent. The situation in respect to the quarries is not so favorable. A large number of cement works have been despoiled of part of their equipment, which was transferred to the factories requisitioned by the Germans.

Legislation is now being considered in Congress to enable our manufacturers and producers of raw material to extend long-time credits for the rebuilding of the factories of Belgium and France and supplying them with the needed materials. The plan in general contemplates the formation, by private capital, of large financial institutions which will discount the obligations of foreign buyers. The purpose of the institutions, if the plan is adopted, will be to serve as agencies to assist our exporters in marketing surplus exportable materials for the rehabilitation of devastated countries as well as to enlarge our export trade generally. The notes received for the sale of the material may be secured by mortgages or some form of guaranty. The companies handling these securities could then offer them to the American investor in the shape of bonds or certificates of indebtedness. On this most important subject which is now occupying the attention of students of finance, let me quote from Mr. Herbert Hoover, whose observations of conditions at close range entitle his views to thoughtful consideration:

Unless something is done to reestablish the credits of the foreign countries in the United States and bring the rate of exchange to somewhere near the normal level, the American manufacturer and farmer will experience the greatest business reversal that the history of the United States has ever known. With the French franc, which previously has been worth about 20 cents, bringing 11 cents, and the English pound greatly depreciated, it is impossible for them to buy. The same thing is true of Italy and other stable Governments. Newly organized Governments can not purchase because they have no credit. Practically all of the money of the world is centered in the United States. It is there because it was forced to come in order to secure that which was necessary for the war. Unless some of that capital is returned in the form of credits, goods can not follow in the line they have previously taken. We must either say, with equanimity, that we will lose much of the billions of dollars that we have loaned to Europe, or must make further extension of credit, so that Europe can produce the goods to provide the money to repay us.

In this connection the following table showing the condition of our foreign trade may be of interest:

	Exports.	Imports.	Balance in favor of United States.

Returning to Paris we arranged a trip to the battle fields made sacred by our fallen dead. The highways in France, despite the terrific wear and tear of the last five years, are in wonderful condition. On the way to Chateau-Thierry the road passes fertile fields, skirts rich meadows, and at La Ferte bridges the famous Marne. It was hard to realize that this river, so peaceful now, beautiful and gentle as the summer's breeze which scarce ruffled its placid surface, was, only a short year ago, the charnel house of dead and dying men.

Last summer, the summer of 1918, when I was in Chateau-Thierry, it was full of American troops. Now only the memory remains of their gallant deeds, but these memories will endure as long as gratitude abides in the human heart, for that handful of American soldiers saved Paris. From the ramparts of the old Chateau, which gave the town its name, we looked across the river to the hills where on that famous 15th day of July our boys of the Third Division encountered the German onslaught—met the attack, held it, and then drove it back in a retreat which ended only when the German war machine four months later sued for peace. This division fought against heavy odds, for the French on their right, unable to withstand the pressure, fell back several miles leaving their own flank exposed. Yet the Third never faltered. They had come to fight, not to retreat, and outnumbered as they were, with their ally retiring, and facing an enemy flushed with confidence, they stood their ground, then smashed through to victory. No wonder the German high command reported that the "Americans are easy to kill, but impossible to stop."

Mezy, just east of Chateau-Thierry, is the place where the Germans endeavored to cross the Marne in their drive for Paris, and it was here that they met their masters. For 16 hours, under a grilling fire of shot and shell and gas, without intermission or relief, the men of the Third Division remained at their posts and by their matchless daring prevented the German hordes from reaching their objective on the heights south of the Marne. That victory illuminates one of the brightest pages in American history. All honor to this division, now known as the Marne Division, and especially to the Thirty-eighth Regiment of Infantry, which turned the tide of battle and made it possible for the Allies to take the offensive.

Belleau Wood, with its shattered trees and gapping shell craters, is hallowed ground, consecrated to the memory of those living and dead who by their valor and their courage added new glory to the traditions of the Marine Corps. In the little cemetery at the foot of the hill, made forever famous by their deeds, lie those who fell in the conflict. With profound reverence we stood before the graves of these heroes who had rendered the full measure of devotion to their country and their flag.

BOIS MARINE BRIGADE.

Bois Belleau; come blow your horn.
Your oaks are shattered,
Thrown over and torn.
Even your name, Bois Belleau,
Is unmade, for now you are called Bois Marine Brigade.

What's in a name?
In some there's naught;
But your name, Bois Belleau,
Was dearly bought.
We gave you our blood,
We gave you our aid.
Come blow your horn,
Bois Marine Brigade.

—Bradford Perrin.

Farther north we came to the place where the First and Second Division made their brilliant counter-attack on July 18. It is historic ground, sacred to the slain as well as to the living, for it was here on that eventful day that American soldiers, supported neither by French nor British troops, Americans and Moroccans only, opened the initial offensive drive, which was the beginning of the end. It was a position of honor, and with honor, our men fulfilled the trust.

At this point let me pause to consider briefly the full significance of that victory. Of its military value there is no question, for it stayed the onrush which was sweeping toward Paris. Almost, if not quite, as important was its effect upon the morale both of friend and foe. To the fainting Allies it brought confidence and hope; to the triumphant enemy consternation and despair. Until the Americans became a factor the Germans were winning the war. We can not be accused of egotism in stating facts, and this undeniably was the case. Let me quote a statement made by that grizzled old veteran, Marshal Joffre, when speaking to a number of American officials. The meeting occurred shortly after our declaration of war, when the general, then a member of the French mission, was in Washington. He said:

We are at the end of our resources. The morale of our armies and of our people is low. We know that you are in the war, and so do the people of France. But we have been led to believe that it will take a year before you can get your soldiers to the other side. I beg of you to see to it that one division of your Regular Army troops is sent immediately. We need them to revive our waning morale. If the soldiers of France and of England see your troops on the soil of France, it will give them courage to withstand the enemy until you can come over in force. The situation is serious; is exceedingly precarious. Do not wait until you have trained men of your conscripted army. That will take too long. But your Regular Army men have already had the training that has established their morale. We can teach them trench fighting in two or three months behind the lines. But send them to us if you want to save the situation.

Let me quote also another authority who had a better opportunity of realizing the effect of American troops upon the outcome of the war. Gen. Ludendorff, commander of the German Armies, says:

As long as our troops kept their morale they would get the better of any foe, even the American divisions, though their nerves were not exhausted as those of the armies that had been long in the war. But the fact weighed heavily that the newly arrived American reenforcements could release French or English troops in quiet sectors. This was a fact of huge importance; it makes clear the influence which the sending of the fighting forces of the United States had upon the outcome of the war. America thus became the decisive power in the war.

I can not refrain from relating a story told me by one of our officers. Even tragedies and sorrows may have their humorous side. A regiment which had been in training finally received orders to proceed to the front. The colonel was instructed to march his men to a certain spot, where he would be met by a guide, who would conduct his command through the danger zone. The troops, long grown impatient at the delay, received the news with shouts and cheers. Reaching the designated place, a French officer came forward, and the colonel, satisfying himself that his orders had been complied with, asked the officer to give instructions. "Follow me," said the Frenchman in a hoarse whisper. The colonel, deeply impressed by the subdued voice of his mentor, gave his orders also in a low whisper. As the word was passed down the line, talking and singing ceased, and in dead silence the troops marched along as if stepping upon eggs. At each turn of the road the same whispered command was given. Finally the guide stopped, saluted, and in a scarcely audible voice said: "Colonel, we will camp here for the night." Orders were whispered down the line, and the men, momentarily expecting an air raid or a barrage, very quietly unslung their packs. Approaching close to the guide the colonel in a whisper asked, "How far are we from the enemy?" In the same hoarse voice the answer came, "About 20 miles, colonel." "Twenty miles," shouted the colonel; "then why in h— do you whisper?" "Because," said the guide, "I have a sore throat."

Rheims, desecrated, shattered, and desolated by four years of war, is now throbbing with life. Of all the French cities we visited in the devastated regions, Rheims was the only one where the broken walls are being rebuilt by helping hands. Hope rises from her ruins and the dawn of a brighter day is already breaking through the darkness of her tragedies and sorrows. Beyond, we came upon the ill-fated plain of Chemin des Dames, a wilderness of destruction and despair. Fort Mailmasson tells its story of heroism and of sacrifice in a shapeless mass of masonry.

We passed through Bazoches, on the Vesle River, which, in August, 1918, was within the German lines. It was with particular interest that I wandered through this town, for last summer, when visiting the Seventy-seventh Division, I had witnessed, from an observation post upon a hill on the opposite side of the river, its bombardment and destruction. And here let me again pay tribute to the men of this famous division, whose record of achievement stands out conspicuously in the annals of the war. These New York troops, recruited from every walk of life, devoid of previous military training, by their valor, determination, and heroic bravery upheld the prestige of the mighty State from which they came. New York, which contributed 368,000 men to the Armies of the United States, can well feel proud of the deeds of her sons.

The last trip we made, before leaving France, was to the Canal du Nord, which runs between St. Quentin and Cambrai, in the British sector. The Hindenburg line was based upon this canal and its steep sides and stone embankments offered a most formidable line of defense. At Bellincourt the canal pierces a hill and runs the entire distance of 5 miles through a long tunnel. Here the Germans had concentrated troops and machine guns, with strongly defended lines protecting the hill in front.

Barges fitted with bunks and kitchens were floated into the tunnel, and the hill became literally a fortress. Electric lights, telephones, and a water system had been installed. Protected from the heaviest artillery fire by the earth and masonry above them, with each end of the tunnel blocked by concrete walls, the German troops were secure from all attack. Openings in the roof of the tunnel, through which stairways ran, gave exits for the men when ordered to take the offensive or relieve those in the outlying trenches. At the mouth of the tunnel, lying close together, I picked up two battered helmets—one an American, the other a German. What was their story? Where were the men who wore them? Did they meet here on alien soil, far from home, to grapple in a hand-to-hand conflict for supremacy until death sealed the verdict of their fate? Perhaps the answer lies buried in some unknown grave.

This tunnel was one of the strongest points on the entire line, and was probably the strongest German defensive position in France, but it fell before the combined attack of the Twenty-seventh and Thirtieth Divisions, operating in conjunction with the British forces. On September 29 the troops "jumped off" in the attack. Their losses were severe, for they were subjected not only to a frontal fire but to a fearful enfilading fire upon their left flank as they smashed forward. For two days the Americans and an Australian division, which was supporting them, fought side by side. One battalion of the One hundred and seventh Infantry—composed largely of the old Seventh of New York City—having reached its objective, was for two and a half days separated from the main body of troops, supplies being sent them by airplanes. Gen. Haig and Gen. Rawlinson, of the British Army, commended in highest terms the action of these two American divisions, and well they might, for it was one of the greatest achievements of the war.

An officer of the Twenty-seventh Division related an incident that occurred at the time of the assault. The men, carrying everything before them, had passed over the hill, when suddenly German machine guns, which had been rushed up through the openings in the tunnel, began firing upon them from the rear. Taken thus by surprise, less valiant soldiers might have been thrown into confusion; not so with our boys. While still attacking the enemy in front, part of the division turned and charged the Germans behind them, sweeping them from the hill in utter annihilation. Do you wonder now, after such deeds of sublime courage, that when the Twenty-seventh Division marched up Fifth Avenue it received the unbounded tributes of praise from the Nation it had served and the State which proudly proclaimed these men her own?

On our way to the Argonne we passed over the Champagne front. It presented the usual appearance of the battle fields—trenches, shell holes, battered pill boxes, and twisted wire. Live shells, hand grenades, and fragments of ragged steel lay everywhere. Owing to the hard, chalky soil of this region, the projectiles exploded on the surface, thus scattering the messengers of death much farther than where the shells, striking on soft ground, buried themselves before fragmenting.

The battle fronts are pretty much alike along the entire line from Switzerland to the North Sea, for each side utilized the same system of entrenchment, consisting of a main, front-line trench, then several rows of supporting trenches, with communication trenches connecting them. Innumerable dugouts, many made of concrete, still line the roadsides or honeycomb the slopes of the hills. At commanding points, machine-gun emplacements and observation posts, constructed in masonry, with steel beams and reinforced concrete, stand as lonely sentinels over the desolation they helped to create. Wire entanglements, broken wagons, pieces of artillery, cartridge cases, and fragments of weapons bear mute testimony to the frightfulness of which they were a part. In many places the salvage corps had gathered in heaps the brass and iron picked up from the fields. All this will be utilized in reconstruction.

The devastated area in France and Belgium extends for over 300 miles. Its average breadth is probably 10 miles, and in all this region there is hardly a house but has been either totally destroyed or badly damaged. The gifts of nature and the products of man alike were ravaged by the holocaust of war. Think of the tragedy of it all! Remember that most of this area was not the scene of one battle only but was the fighting zone for four years of the most destructive warfare ever known. No man's land varied in width as the formation of the land varied; sometimes 50 yards separated the front trenches; more often the distance was half a mile or even more. In many places the terrain presents a continuous mass of hummocks, craters, and shattered rock. Neither tree nor bush remains. It is a tumultuous sea of upturned earth, not an inch of soil escaping its baptism of fire. But nature, ever anxious to conceal her wounds, was at work. The rains of spring and the breath of summer had coaxed the grass and the flowers to lend their gentle mantle to cover the scars beneath. Daisies nodded their heads to the winds, and masses of poppies, those poppies of song and poetry, gorgeous in their brilliant red, gave warmth and color to the somber scene.

As in Belgium, German prisoners are here at work leveling old craters, filling up trenches, winding up wire, and removing shells. These shells—"duds," as they are called—and there are thousands of them, form a serious menace to the cultivation of the soil, for a plowshare striking the nose may cause the missile to explode. Many fatal accidents of this character have already added their toll to the casualties of war. A systematic search is being carried on for these dangerous relics. They are collected, piled into heaps in old shell holes, and then fired by electricity. The roar of the explosions reminds one of battle, and we could almost imagine that the war was still on. By next year the fields will show little evidence of the great struggle, but it will be many years before the devastated houses and cities are restored. Some will forever remain in ruins, silent witnesses to the tragedies that swept them out of existence.

No spoken word or written line can adequately describe the agony of those ghastly cities of the dead. The power of language fails when it attempts to depict that utter, hopeless desolation, that wilderness worse than a desert, foul and fearful. Magazine articles and books have been penned, speeches made, but each and every one falls short of the reality. We look upon it en masse, but should remember that every stone pounded into dust came from an individual home; some one, some human being like you or I, owned each bit of that tortured ground. Every piece of property belonged to some little French family to whom it was their all. These people love their homes and are coming back, returning to villages they do not know, to towns they can not recognize, all a mass of rubbish, filled with decay and filth indescribable, to fields covered with graves where visible death is marked by crosses and hidden death by the bombs and hand grenades which lie concealed like deadly serpents. To see these poor, homeless refugees struggling along the dusty roads pushing a cart piled with the few articles they had managed to save, leading a cow perhaps; the half-naked little children and tottering old men and women going back to start life anew, touches one's heart. In many places all vestige of their houses has been swept away; only heaps of débris remain. What must be the anguish, the unutterable despair of these victims of a war of annihilation, seeking in vain in those wastes for some old friend, some familiar spot, some landmark to indicate their homes of happy days!

We passed through the jungle of the Argonne Forest, where the Seventy-seventh Division won imperishable glory. In a deep ravine we saw the "rest camps" of the Germans—substantially constructed barracks, built in terraces, with paths and steps connecting the tiers. Little summer houses had been erected on the knolls, and a theater, swimming pool, electric-light plant, and water system give conclusive evidence that the Germans considered this secluded spot impregnable to assault, and so it was until the Americans decided to possess it. We went into the wonderful concrete dugout of the Crown Prince of Bavaria, more like a palatial club than an army officer's headquarters. When our boys paid their call the host had departed, but in his haste had left behind the trappings of his quarters. Pictures still hung upon the paneled and frescoed walls, and tableware, linen, and expensive china graced the sideboard. Open fireplaces, elaborate furniture, rugs, and built-in ranges indicated that this crowned head believed, at least, that war should not be devoid of creature comforts. Stairways led to underground recesses 60 feet below the surface, from which passages and stairways communicated with exits in other parts of the camp. In the event of an air raid, the Crown Prince could retreat to this subterranean refuge, and in case one stairway became blocked four others offered him opportunity of reaching the world above.

In this forest, where only a few months before resounded the roar of artillery, the stillness of the tomb now prevails; not a sound breaks in upon the silence. Even the birds shun the spot as if it were a land accursed. How graphic the story of America's triumph came to us as we traced the movements of our troops in those grim days of a year ago. In every American home the Argonne and the Meuse are household words. For all time these battle fields will be shrines where those who seek the grandest exemplification of valor will come to offer tribute to the men who made these names immortal.

In Paris, a wonderful panoramic painting of the war depicting hosts of warriors marching from the battle fields to receive the victors' wreaths and the thanks of a grateful nation. Every allied country is represented, supporting France. In the background are the cities of the war zone, each marked by name. One predominates the others; its name alone has been lettered in gold. It is Verdun. That word is on every tongue in France; it is known wherever courage is valued. For France, it embodies the conviction of her faith, the pledge of her determination, the consecration of her devotion. It is a symbol of her bravery and her valor, the triumph of her fortitude and her sacrifice. Here France, alone and unaided, met the mighty hordes of the invader, and here proved her right to live among the nations of the earth. The glory of Verdun and the deathless fame of 400,000 of her sons who fell in the attack is an epic, the most superb in the annals of mankind.

Over the shattered hills of Verdun our own boys won imperishable glory in the great Meuse offensive, the ultimate objective of which was the Sedan-Mezieres Railroad. This great four-track system, running through Sedan, was the main artery by which Germany supplied her armies on the central and western sections of the front. Could this be captured the enemy would be compelled to evacuate Belgium and Northern France. The topography of the country lent itself to formidable defense. On one side was the Argonne forest, a jungle of deep ravines and sharp ridges, covered by thickets of underbrush and tangled trees, in which every known system of defense had been installed. To the east were the heights of the Meuse extending northward to Sedan and south to Verdun. Each strategic point of the German side was protected by prepared defensive positions. It was in this offensive that the rolling barrage was employed on a hitherto unknown scale. Here let me quote from Congressman TILSON, who is an authority on artillery tactics:

> In the early part of the war, when an attack was contemplated, a barrage was planned and laid down from guns in place. Their range could be extended from short range to extreme range of the longest range gun. When it became necessary to move the barrage farther forward it was generally found very difficult or impossible to do so. The consequence was that there were very few advances longer than the extreme range of a large fieldpiece. When this campaign was planned it was determined that the barrage should be carried along. When the Infantry advanced to the limit of the barrage the guns in the rear were to be moved forward and through the guns nearer the front, so as to take up another position in the front and continue to carry the barrage forward.

The Meuse-Argonne offensive opened on September 26 with a bombardment by 2,500 pieces of artillery. I will not attempt to narrate the movements in this great campaign—this wholly American campaign, where our casualties totaled the appalling number of 120,000. Its story is known. No one can pass over that territory without realizing the magnitude of the task our soldiers undertook. No one who has seen those fields of battle can fail to be moved with emotion for the valor of the men who carried the flag in triumph to Sedan.

Probably the most famous as well as the most conspicuous position on the Meuse heights is Montfaucon. The summit of this steep hill commands a view of the entire country, and here the German Crown Prince had his headquarters during the attack upon Verdun in the spring of 1916. It was the nearest he ever reached the city. In one of the houses was a heavy concrete shaft, built in from the cellar to the roof, and so disguised by the framework of the building as to escape observation. A great periscope enabled him, while concealed below, to observe the movements of his troops upon the distant battle fields. His bed chamber in the cellar had walls of reinforced concrete over 4 feet thick. I want to include a little poem about this hill written by a soldier:

THE ROAD TO MONTFAUCON.

M. P., the road from Avocourt
That leads to Montfaucon?
The road, sir, black with mules and carts
And brown with men a-marching on—
The Romagne Woods that lie beyond
The ruined heights of Montfaucon.

North over reclaimed no man's land,
The martyred roadway leads,
Quick with forward-moving hosts,
And quick with valiant deeds,
Avenging Rheims, Liege, and Lille,
And outraged gods and creeds.

There lies the road from Avocourt
That leads to Montfaucon,
Past sniper and machine-gun nests,
By steel and thermite cleansed. They're gone—
And there in thund'rous echelon,
The ruined heights of Montfaucon.

Not far from Verdun, in the little village of Romagne, a large national cemetery has been established, where 23,000 American soldiers lie asleep. In the center arises a great flagpole from which flies the flag, the emblem of their faith and devotion. Around the standard in close formation are the heroes awaiting the reveille on the Judgment Day. Each cross, each white cross, bears the name of the man, his company and regiment. A boy who was almost like a son to me lies with his comrades in that cemetery. He was in a machine-gun company and was killed only a few days before the armistice. His father asked me to try and find his grave. I went to the little town of Chevieres, where he had been buried. Scarcely a vestige remains of this hamlet, the church and graveyard and all the houses are a mass of ruins. An old French peasant told me that one American soldier had been buried in the little churchyard, but that his body had been removed a few weeks previously. Hunting among the tombs I came to an open grave. The fresh soil indicated the disinterment of the body only a short time before. I despaired of ever finding the object of my search, for there was no one to give me information; however, when I went to the cemetery at Romagne I renewed my efforts. It seemed almost hopeless among that 23.000 men, but at last I came to the grave. There on a cross, in the shadow of the flag he had died to defend, was the name of the man I sought—

Herbert Groesbeck, jr.,
First Lieutenant, Company A,
Three hundred and ninth Machine Gun Battalion.

Gathering a few poppies from the adjoining field, in silent reverence I placed them upon the grave of that boy—the only child of bereaved parents who also had contributed their all to the service of their country.

From Verdun we went to St. Mihiel, passing through towns which before the attack of September 12 had been in German hands since the beginning of the war. This, too, was an American offensive, planned by American officers and executed by American soldiers. Although French troops participated, they were under American command, as our troops had been under French command at Chateau-Thierry and Soissons. A very interesting side light occurred in connection with this campaign. When our Naval Committee visited Paris in September, last year, plans for the campaign were freely discussed in the hotels and other public places. There seemed to be no secrecy about the forthcoming operation, even the date for the attack being mentioned. The plans were so generally known that many considered it a piece of camouflage, predicting that the real offensive would be undertaken at a different place and date. But the plans were genuine, and as full preparations had been made it became necessary to divert attention to some other part of the line. German spies were everywhere, and, of course, the imperial command knew of the proposed operations and were arranging to meet it.

To foil the Germans an officer of high rank, in ignorance of the part he was to play, was ordered to another sector with instructions to prepare for a forward movement. Then detachments of troops were ordered to report to him, and every effort was made to give the whole affair the appearance of a genuine maneuver. Wireless messages, speaking of great forces and large quantities of artillery being concentrated for an attack, were sent out from headquarters, all for the purpose of misleading the Germans. They were deceived, for they sent several full divisions and a large number of guns to defend that sector, and while waiting for the attack which never came, the Battle of St. Mihiel was fought, with those German divisions miles away. This salient, which for four years had defied every attempt of the French to reduce it, was won by our forces in 27 hours. Again let me pay tribute to our soldiers and their heroism.

Before leaving this first all-American campaign I will speak of the controversy which arose as to whether or not there should be a distinct American Army. Many influential allied officers were opposed to the organization of a completed and separate American unit. They desired to use our soldiers as replacement troops under British or French command. Although during the war Americans were brigaded with both the English and the French, Gen. Pershing, to his everlasting credit, was determined that there should be an American Army on the battle front under his direct command. At one time the situation became extremely tense, but Gen. Pershing held out, and finally declared, as I understand, that "we would fight as an American Army if we fought at all." Under this pressure both Marshal Foch and Gen. Haig yielded. But for Gen. Pershing's insistence we would have had no American sector and probably little independent credit for any American activity.

From St. Mihiel we drove to Metz, passing through the Saar Valley. What a difference in the appearance of the country on the two sides of the boundary line! On the French border, desolation and gloom; on the German, prosperity and brightness. We passed mile after mile of smiling farms and populous villages free from any effect of the war. We visited the great fortresses that surround Metz, forts already christened with French names. The public buildings, too, have been marked by the French coat of arms, for remember this is Alsace, and for 50 years every Frenchman has vowed Alsace would be restored to France. On the great cathedral is a row of statues of the saints, and in a conspicuous place among them, gowned in priestly robes, was a figure of the Kaiser. Some wag had hung around his neck a label upon which was the motto, "Thus passes worldly glory."

Then to the Rhine with its traditions and its romances; the Rhine, which during the war was the goal of every soldier. To-day three flags fly along its banks, strangers to the land. On the upper reaches of the river the flag of France, lower down the flag of Great Britain, while between flies the flag of America. We passed through Frankfurt, Wiesbaden, Mayence, Coblenz, and Cologne, and everywhere business was conducted as if nothing had happened. Although there was a general complaint of shortage of food, there was no evidence of any suffering. Men, women, and children were dressed comfortably, and their bodily wants seemed supplied. Even the river presented its usual appearance of laden barges carrying coal to the factories in the north. Vineyards and farms showed no diminution in cultivation, and prices of commodities of all kinds, although far higher than before the war, were much lower than in Paris.

In this region the Germans seem to have returned to work and to have accepted, as far as surface indications showed, the verdict of the peace treaty. We were told of many instances, however, of meetings being held to protest against agreeing to all the terms of that document. The German mark, which before the war was worth approximately 24 cents of our money, had fallen to about 5 cents, and to-day is worth only 2½ cents.

On our way back to Paris we passed through Luxemburg, a little country of less than 250,000 people, one of the neutral States in the war, but whose territory had been overrun by the German armies. I was surprised to learn that there were more Luxemburgers in the United States than in their own country.

Returning to Paris, we immediately started for the British sector, passing on our way to Amiens, through Senlis, Compiegne, Noyon, Ham, St. Quentin, Le Catelet, and Cambrai—towns made famous by the war. We were impressed with the appearance of Ham, a city badly damaged by shell, but which had been almost entirely cleared of débris, ready for the builders. Everywhere was a great absence of men, only women and children and old people being seen. We must remember that over a million French soldiers were still with the colors. St. Quentin presents a most terrible appearance of destruction, her great manufacturing plants being masses of twisted steel and broken machinery. Huge pill boxes had been constructed at many of the crossings in order to sweep the streets on the advance of the Allies. There is something uncanny and terrible about these grim blocks of concrete even now, harmless though they be, but when they were spitting sheets of flame from a concealed machine gun they must have been frightful beyond description.

Amiens shows little damage. You will recall that it was the objective in the great German drive in March; but the imperial army never succeeded in reaching it. Albert, Bapaume, Peronne, and Arras are shattered and desolated almost beyond repair. We were in the valley of the Somme, the battle ground of the British Army, where for years the men of Great Britain and Ireland and the dominions overseas met the enemy in combat like the bulldogs that they are. Just beyond Arras lies Vimy Ridge, where the Canadians fought to glory and to death. From the summit of this ridge, which will forever stand out as a monument to Canadian valor, are two shafts erected to the memory of the men who fought for supremacy—one a Canadian monument, the other a German.

Near Vimy is what was once the city of Lens, with a population before the war of over 32,000 inhabitants. It presented the most frightful picture of desolation we had seen. Ruins indescribable reach as far as the eye can see—not a single house standing—only formless heaps of broken bricks, twisted steel, and splintered wood. One church spire alone stands above the welter of débris, pointing as it were to the immutability of Christ's teachings. Lens before the war was one of the most prosperous cities of France; the great coal district of the nation. The Germans, in order to cripple an industrial rival, destroyed the tipples and hoists, and then, not being satisfied, exploded great charges of dynamite within the mines themselves. Tons of concrete were placed in the wreckage and the mines flooded. In some mines, we were told, the Germans had buried thousands of their dead, converting the wrecked tunnels and shafts into cemeteries. The restoration of these mines, even approaching maximum production, seems hopeless, and at best many years must elapse before France can utilize them to any appreciable extent.

Returning to Paris, we prepared for our journey home, having been advised of the President's action in asking that Congress remain in session instead of recessing as planned.

When speaking of France, the question uppermost in one's mind is, "How is she recovering from the effects of the war, and how is she meeting the problems of reconstruction and economic readjustment?" There are so many angles from which to approach this query, and the subject is so vast and complicated that only in a general way can any answer be given. France at present is in a transition stage—a period of reaction from the terrible strain and anxiety of four years of destructive war on her own soil, four years of imminent danger to her material existence. There is a relaxing or letting down of the forces which sustained her throughout the darkest days of her history. While glorying in her triumphs she is nursing her sorrows, and has not yet attuned herself to the conditions of peace. Without question there is a feeling of dejection, discouragement, and even of indifference out of keeping with that heroic spirit of service, bravery, and undiminished faith which was so manifest when her armies, shattered and broken but unconquered, bid defiance to the invaders at Soissons and Rheims, and held the heights of the Meuse at immortal Verdun.

Yet who can blame her after all her sacrifices? Hers is not mere suffering from mental anguish—it is the acute agony of blows, the most terrific conceivable. Can France rehabilitate herself? Yes; it may and probably will take years, but a nation that can rise to the heights of sacrifice and the glory of courage of a Verdun will not die or surrender in the battles of peace. The basic principles of French character are thrift and love of country, and she will endure.

In addition to the seemingly hopeless problem of reconstruction and replacement of destroyed cities and factories is the problem of clearing away the débris, a gigantic task in itself. Where swamps exist in proximity to the towns, they afford a dumping place for this waste material, but only in a few instances do such conditions prevail. And then to the vastness of the undertaking must be added the attendant danger from live shells which lie buried everywhere in the ruins. These make it impossible to use modern steam shovels, for the records show that when hit, one shell in every ten explodes.

The losses of France in blood, property, and treasure are appalling. A million and a third of her best manhood perished in battle or died of wounds—a million more were hopelessly maimed. Two million of her civil population became refugees or prisoners in the invaded regions, while thousands died of disease, the direct result of war. What of the material losses? Twenty-five hundred towns and villages and 450.000 buildings, not including factories, completely destroyed, with 50,000 more badly damaged, costing over $6,000,000,000 to replace.

In agriculture, although all must be redeemed—not, however, out of new country but out of the wreckage of battle fields—the future is assured. Cattle and implements must be procured, it is true, but the peasant, the backbone of France, is already on his way back prepared to fight once more on the old battle fields, this time with the plow and the hoe, and again he will win. Four million four hundred and fifty thousand acres of farm lands under cultivation, producing each year before the war $150,000,000 worth of crops. were devastated. The agricultural and forestry losses are estimated at $3.000,000,000. In addition to these losses must be added the value of hundreds of thousands of head of horses and cattle stolen, the number of milch cows alone that were seized being estimated at 500,000.

Industrially the outlook is gloomy in the extreme. Mr. Vanderlip expresses the situation by two words—"industrial paralysis." The great factories of northern France no longer exist. To replace the structures and restore the machinery will require both time and money. Time means idleness, suffering, perhaps immigration. Money—there is none. The only hope of industrial France is long-time credits, and with them, to replace all that was destroyed will tax the genius of the mightiest financiers. Even the clearing away of the wreckage will involve enormous expense. When the Germans retreated from northern France they blew up every railroad bridge and wrecked every station—3,137 bridges and aqueducts were destroyed or damaged. The lines themselves have either been torn up for replacement in Germany or have been shelled out of existence.

The locomotives and cars which escaped capture had been worn out during the war, and there is no new equipment to be had. Yet here the work of reconstruction is going forward rapidly, for France realizes that her future depends upon transportation. Old rolling stock is being repaired, to which has been added many German and Austrian cars. This was the only field of industry in which we saw any progress made. Out of 1,227 miles of railroad, 1,209 had been restored to use by September 1, and also 420 out of 641 miles of canals. Of highways in the devastated area, 660 miles have been rebuilt. The losses in transportation are estimated at $1,000,000,000. The French commission on reparations has reported the industrial losses as follows:

Coal mines	$900, 000, 000
Metal industries	2, 500, 000, 000
Dye industries	900, 000, 000
Textile industries	4, 000, 000, 000
Various industries	1, 800, 000, 000

Before the war France produced 41,000,000 tons of coal annually, half of which came from the invaded regions, now a wilderness. The total estimated damage of French property as the result of war is estimated at over $20,000,000,000.

Because of her great loss in man power, which is causing a serious retarding of the work of reconstruction, France, with a view to increasing the available supply of labor for this work, has concluded with the Polish Government an arrangement which will result in the sending to France of 100,000 Polish workers, for the greater part miners and stonemasons.

On the industrial situation, let me quote from that eminent student of economics, Mr. F. H. Simonds:

> In this field France is not beginning, or is starting with extreme slowness. The war has made France a poor country. It lacks the capital, the money, to buy raw materials. With a depreciated currency to buy them in foreign country, to buy the machinery, to buy all that is essential to begin industrial life, is to risk financial chaos. Only the German indemnities can restore the stability of French currency, if America will not lend, and against the coming of the indemnity the Government stolidly refuses to permit foreign purchases. So the paralysis continues on the industrial side. Here Germany has won, at least temporarily. She had put one nation out of the race, while her own factories are intact. Without credits, without loans, without aid, French industry can not start life.

In speaking of the future of France, Premier Clemenceau, the very incarnation of dynamic force, says:

> It is true that our fields have been ravaged and our villages and towns razed. The elite of our young manhood reposes in our sacred soil enshrouded in glory. All our wealth has been spent without measure; our best blood has been shed from all our pores; tears have furrowed all faces; all hearts have trembled with unspeakable horror. France is erect, alive, and strong in its will for justice, as in the military virtues of its great soldiers. Now, everyone to the task, to accomplish the duties of to-morrow.

In this connection Baron du Marais, vice president of the French economic mission, in a statement recently made to a correspondent of the New York Times, reported that—

> The basic elements of the economic solidity of France have been in no way impaired by the four years of war, which she has successfully concluded. These basic elements are: The will to work of her people, the fertility of her soil, and the natural raw material resources which she possesses within her own borders and in her colonies.
> Owing to the war, 4,500,000 acres of French land have been rendered unfit for immediate cultivation. The result is that in 1920 France will have to import about $150,000,000 worth of food. This condition is, of course, purely temporary, as prior to the war France produced 90 per cent of the foodstuffs she consumed.
> TO INCREASE FOOD OUTPUT.
> The return of Alsace assures in France a large supply of chemical fertilizers. This will enable the farmers of France to increase their production so greatly that by 1921 her imports in foodstuffs will be small as compared to 1920, and by 1922 she will again be producing sufficient for her needs.
> "There is no land-labor problem in France. Farming is productive of considerable financial results, and as a great majority of the farmers own their own land and work it with their sons on the basis of cooperation, the profit which accrues is equitably distributed to a very large number of people. When the farm hands were demobilized they returned to their farms and took up their work without hesitation and without loss of time.

The French industrial situation presents a problem more varied and more difficult of solution than the agricultural, for on the quick solving of the industrial problem rests the rapid recovery of France from the effects of the late war. Industry in France can not recover without the assurance of a supply of the necessary raw materials it demands. The most accessible source of supply for most of these raw materials is America, but it is uneconomic to buy in the most expensive market in the world, and the present rate of exchange makes the American market the most expensive in the world.

Coal is the first item on the list of the needed raw materials for industry. Before the war France was already obliged to import largely. As 60 per cent of her domestic coal supply was furnished from the northern regions, and as many of these productive mines have been rendered unfit for work for a number of years, France faces at present an annual shortage of 20,000,000 tons, which will be bought in the market offering the most advantageous terms.

Besides increasing as rapidly as possible her own coal production, France is developing and has developed water power as the logical substitute for coal. Already her rivers and waterfalls are supplying her with 1,500,000 horsepower, and she has at her disposal some 5,000,000 horsepower as yet undeveloped. The introduction of modern coal-saving devices in every French plant of importance is in most cases an accomplished fact.

SOON TO EXPORT STEEL.

In spite of the German invasion, France, the second greatest producer of iron ore and steel in the world, is at present producing sufficient steel and iron for home consumption. Further, she will soon be ready to export at the rate of 17,000,000 tons of iron ore per annum and 2,000,000 tons of steel. This rapid recovery of the steel industry has been made possible by:

First. The fact that the natural conditions of the French iron mines prevented any considerable damage by the German invasion.

Second. The restoration of the Lorraine Basin to France.

Third. The acquisition for a period of years of the Sarre Basin and the acquisition of the controlling interest in certain great steel works in Luxemburg.

Many of our steel plants, temporarily incapacitated by the Germans, will soon be placed on a productive basis again, as the machinery stolen can be easily and correctly identified and so returned to France.

The French textile industries were greatly damaged through the German invasion. Lille, Roubaix, Tourcoing, Sedan, the chief centers of this industry, were for four years in German hands. The return of Alsace-Lorraine, however, to a great extent compensates for this damage, and by the use of modern machinery the French textile manufacturers, who before the war exported a profitable surplus of their products, will next year be able to fill all the demands of the home market. To do this, however, they must import from America 1,000,000 bales of cotton in 1920. Here again the satisfying of this demand rests upon the extension of the credits necessary for the making of this purchase.

Including the demands of less important industries, the total cost of the raw material and food needs of France for 1920 can be placed at an irreducible figure of $600,000,000 to $700,000,000. On the fulfillment of this demand for food and raw material rests the rapid restoration and return to prosperity of France. Without aid she would still recover, but the process of convalescence would be needlessly and uselessly prolonged. The extension of about a 10-year period of credit for this sum is necessary to France for the following reasons:

First. To enable her to maintain at an equitable figure the costs of the necessities of life.

Second. To insure sufficient time for the complete recovery of her industries.

Third. To permit repayment at a rate of exchange not prohibitively unfavorable.

Fourth. France is in the position of one whose reputation for honesty must be maintained and desires a period of 10 years in which to make repayment because she is sure that within 10 years the means available for repayment will be at hand.

SEES FRENCH LABOR STABLE.

The securities for the extension of credit are three in number: First is the Frenchman's characteristic love and desire for work. The French labor situation has stabilized itself, of itself, more rapidly than that of any other country in the world. A striking proof of this stability was given at Lyons not more than two months ago, when the delegates of the great French Confederation of Labor and the Steel and Iron Workers' Union met in conference. French labor voiced to the world through its chosen representatives the motto it had adopted for itself, "Maximum production."

Further, the Frenchman and the Frenchwoman, whatever may have been said to the contrary, realize that they must and indeed are willing to pay the taxes which their Government has thought it necessary to impose upon them for the payment of the indebtedness which, as French men and women, they incurred during the war. The per capita taxation in 1919 of every man, woman, and child in France is $56. This burden of taxation is borne by the uninvaded four-fifths of France. The other fifth will not be taxed until it has been assured of a reasonable measure of recovery from the vandalism which it suffered.

Second. In actual and potential natural resources, France with her colonies has practically unlimited quantities of supplies necessary to her economic and industrial development. Morocco offers a virtually untouched field for agricultural and mineral supplies. Morocco and western Africa within three years can supply France with 30 per cent of her raw cotton needs. The French iron and steel industry, which doubled its output in the 10 years preceding the war, is assured of rapid and sound development, particularly in view of the return to France of Alsace-Lorraine.

Third. France is financially sound. Of her total indebtedness of $36,000,000,000, 85 per cent is in the hands of French people and is distributed among 7,000,000 investors. The remaining 15 per cent is counterbalanced by at least an equal amount due to France by the nations of central and eastern Europe. A certain portion of the sums to be paid by Germany to France as reparation for war damages will be set aside as a sinking fund against the national debt.

In a word, France is in need of ready cash to be used as working capital until the terrific investment which was made in Liberty and Right starts to bring in dividends. She needs cash now, and 10 years in which to repay.

Speaking in terms of prosperity and sound business, the world is a unit. An unnecessarily long delay in the complete restoration and natural development of France will react to the detriment not only of France and the French, but also of America and Americans. We must either stand as a unit or eventually fall as a unit. As a unit we have achieved victory in the cause of right as against might; as a unit we must assure the fruits of this victory not only to America but to the world.

So much for France. Of the doughboy in Europe, "He came, he saw, he conquered," and then when his work was done he was compelled to stay in France many weary months. I do not blame him for kicking; he was entitled to grumble. Of his deeds, that is history. Of himself on the line or back in the rest areas, he was an American—that is all—a big, reliant, fearless, splendid American. He did every job that was asked of him, and did it right. He played hard and he fought hard. He went into a fight with as brave a heart as God ever placed in human breast, and with a smile on his face he passed down into the shadows. He was the finest soldier in all Europe. He knew it, but it did not make him self-concerned, only proud that he was a representative of a great race, the embodiment of the will of the Nation whose uniform he wore. He saw France, unabashed and unafraid, strong, wholesome, generous, conscious of his strength, yet gentle—except when there was fighting to be done. Sam Browne belts were not popular with him. Some of his officers, newly come to rank, were not equal to their tasks, but he always was. By his sublime courage, his unfailing optimism, and his abiding faith that nothing could withstand the United States of America he smashed through to every objective, and would have gone to Berlin had not the armistice stopped his victorious advance. As a "scrap of paper" had been Germany's downfall, so another scrap of paper saved her from reaping the whirlwind she had started. Of this we are certain—never again will any nation which saw the American soldier in action challenge him without a realization of what that challenge means.

While we remain loyal to our institutions and adhere to the principles laid down by the fathers in their conception of constitutional government; while we render willing obedience to established law and stand steadfast against the malign forces of disorder, our individual liberty and our national independence and sovereignty will continue unimpaired. While we cherish the memory of the patriotic sacrifice of those who offered their lives to duty and remember the unselfish service of our people, determined to surrender all, to render all for country in its hour of trial, despite dangers that may arise or crises that may threaten, we can look into the unfathomed years with assured confidence that the American Republic will endure, a guiding star for the civilizations of the world.

I know of no way more fitting or appropriate in which to close the series of addresses on the war it has been my privilege to make, than to quote the eloquent words of Gen. Pershing on the occasion of his receiving the thanks of Congress:

"The burdens that fell to the lot of our soldiers have been heavy, and the way beset by many obstacles, but faith in the righteousness of our cause and trust in Almighty God have given us courage and inspiration.

"The trials of battle demanded Spartan endurance and utmost self-sacrifice. Never have men faced a more difficult task nor borne greater hardship, and never have troops shown a finer spirit of willingness or more resolute purpose.

"The might of America lay not only in her numbers and her wealth but also in the spirit of the people and their determination to succeed at whatever cost. While every man who went to France courageously did his part, behind him were millions of others eager to follow, all supported by a loyal people who deprived themselves to sustain our armies and to succor our allies.

"Whether billeted in French, Belgian, or Italian villages, or in the camps of England, our young men have left behind them a standard of frankness, of integrity, of gentleness, and of helpfulness, which will give the other nations of the world a firmer belief in the sincerity of our motives.

"The benefits flowing from the experience of our soldiers will be broadly felt. They have returned in the full vigor of their manhood, strong and clean. In the community of effort, men from all walks of life have learned to know and to appreciate each other. Through their patriotism, discipline, and association they have become virile, confident, and broadminded. Rich in the consciousness of honorable public service, they will bring into the life of our country a deeper love for our institutions and a more intelligent devotion to the duties of citizenship.

"To you, gentlemen of the Congress, we owe the existence and the maintenance of our armies in the field. With a clear conception of the magnitude of the struggle, you adopted the draft as the surest means of utilizing our man power. You promptly enacted wise laws to develop and apply our resources to the best effect. You appropriated the fabulous sums required for military purposes. Many of your Members visited our armies in the field and cheered us by their interest and sympathy. You made possible the organization and the operations by which victory was achieved.

"The various staffs, bureaus, and departments, with all their personnel, are deserving of especial acknowledgment for the ability with which their problems were met. The officers and soldiers who served at home are entitled to their full share in the victory. There existed a unity of purpose between our Government in all of its branches and the command of the troops in the field that materially hastened the end.

"Our Navy performed a brilliant part in transporting troops and supplies and in maintaining our sea communications. The Army was convoyed across the seas with the maximum of safety and comfort and with incredibly small loss.

"A special tribute is due to those benevolent men and women who ministered to the needs of our soldiers at home and abroad. The welfare societies, maintained by a generous public, gave us invaluable aid. In our hospitals the surgeons and nurses, both permanent and temporary, served with a skill and fidelity that will ever be worthy of our grateful remembrance.

"Business and professional men abandoned their private interests and gave their service to the country. Devoted men, women, and even children, often in obscure positions, zealously labored to increase the output of ships, munitions, war material, and food supplies, while the press and the pulpit stimulated patriotic enthusiasm.

"Our admiration goes out to our war-worn allies, whose tenacity after three years of conflict made possible the effectiveness of our effort. Through their loyal support and hearty cooperation a genuine spirit of comradeship sprang up among us which should firmly unite the peoples as it did their armies.

"The cheerfulness and fortitude of our wounded were an inspiration and a stimulus to their comrades. Those who are disabled should become the affectionate charge of our people, whose care they have so richly earned. Let us in sympathy remember the widows and the mothers who to-day mourn the loss of their husbands and sons.

"Our hearts are filled with reverence and love for our triumphant dead. Buried in hallowed ground which their courage redeemed, their graves are sacred shrines that the Nation will not fail to honor.

"The glorious record made in the fight for our treasured ideals will be a precious heritage to posterity. It has welded together our people and given them a deeper sense of nationality. The solidity of the Republic and its institutions in the test of a world war should fill with pride every man and woman living under its flag. The great achievements, the high ideals, the sacrifices of our Army and our people belong to no party and to no creed. They are the Republic's legacy to be sacredly treasured and carefully transmitted to future generations."

PILGRIMS.

For oh, when the war will be over
  We'll go and we'll look for our dead;
We'll go when the bee's on the clover,
  And the plume of the poppy is red;
We'll go when the year's at its gayest,
  When meadows are laughing with flow'rs;
And there where the crosses are greyest,
  We'll seek for the cross that is ours.

For they cry to us: "Friends, we are lonely,
  A-weary the night and the day;
But come in the blossom-time only,
  Come when our graves will be gay;
When daffodils all are a-blowing,
  And larks are a-thrilling the skies,
Oh, come with the hearts of you glowing,
  And the joy of the Spring in your eyes.

But never, oh, never come sighing,
  For ours was the Splendid Release;
And oh, but 'twas joy in the dying
  To know we were winning you Peace!
So come when the valleys are sheening,
  And fledged with the promise of grain;
And here where our graves will be greening,
  Just smile and be happy again."

And so, when the war will be over,
  We'll seek for the Wonderful One;
And maiden will look for her lover,
  And mother will look for her son;
And there will be end to our grieving,
  And gladness will gleam over loss,
As—glory beyond all believing!
  We point . . . to a name on a cross.

LETTERS FROM A QUAKER DOUGHBOY TO HIS MOTHER.

[Pvt. W. F. T., Fifty-fifth Company, Second Battalion, Fifth Regiment United States Marines; member Pershing's composite regiment.]

PARIS ISLAND, S. C., June 4, 1918—6.15 a. m.

DEAREST PARENTS: Well, it is raining hard, the first rain we have had since we have been here, and it is a heavenly relief; the heat has been something fearful, never less than 95 all day long, and such a sun, it just seems to burn you up; but with all that, it is not so bad. Excuse the change of ink, but mine went dry, like the country.

We drill all the time and will soon be good soldiers. We are on the drill grounds at least five hours a day and the rest of the time is all taken up with work, except a few hours, which we have to ourselves, and you are so tired then that you go right to bed. This life will sure make a man of you if it doesn't ruin you.

We had to go down and wash our clothes yesterday, and they make sure that you have them very clean; if they are not, the officer throws them on the ground and walks on them, takes your name, and makes you wash them again.

We will be here in this camp for about three weeks; then at the main camp for two weeks; then two weeks on the range; then maybe a 15-day leave; then Texas or Quantico, or heaven knows where we may go.

We had a little storm last night, but it is clear and hot now. Will close, as inspection is here. Lots of love.

BILL.

PARIS ISLAND, S. C.

DEAREST PARENTS: Well, it is raining again, and we are having a little rest, and it is very welcome.

What do you think? I have been made a squad leader in my company, and that may mean a corporal in a regular fighting company; it is the first step in promotion, and I am glad to get it.

I met the battalion chaplain yesterday and he asked me what religion I had, and I told him I was a Quaker, and he said from all he heard the people were proud of the fighting Quakers.

We went for another swim yesterday and it was fine, but not nice walking home, as the sand got in our feet and hurt.

The sun is out now and I imagine we will get a good three-hour drill after "chow," but don't mind, as I am getting to enjoy it now.

A brigadier general inspected our tents this p. m. and we are making ours look just as neat as possible.

This is by far the nicest service that anyone could get in; there is a moderate amount of swearing, but only when one has a real cause to swear does he swear; I have heard no dirty stories as yet, and as far as I can see there is none of it in camp. Will close, as "chow" is ready.

Your loving son,

BILL.

AUGUST 30, 1918.

The ship on which I sailed has arrived safely overseas.

Your ever loving son,

FRANCE, August 30, 1918.

DEAREST PARENTS: Well, I suppose you have received my card stating that I have arrived safely, and this will relieve your minds as to where I am. It was rather sudden, but I could not let you know beforehand, as I could not telegraph the news and did not get a chance to write. I am writing now using a mess can for a desk, and so you must excuse this writing. We will be going to a training camp soon. We are in a rest camp now, but we don't seem to get much rest. We had a fine trip over—no rough weather and no submarines. We are now sleeping in our little pup tents, which serve the purpose very well indeed, although they are rather small. If you send me any boxes, send candy, smoking tobacco, and crackers and fruit cake. Either will be welcome, as we are always hungry. It seems to be cloudy most of the time here, but once in a while the sun breaks through.

The population shows the effects of the war here where we are, even if the land does not. My, from what we hear over here the war is well in favor of the Allies now. Is it, now?

Will try and write soon again.

Your own loving son,

BILLY.

AUGUST 31, 1918.

DEAREST: Here we are in our little "pup" tents, and it is raining outside. We are still in the same place, but I think we will move soon now. I surely do hope so.

We have good food out here; not much variety, but, all the same, good, wholesome food.

Well, it is getting on to fall now, and it will seem funny not to be going back to Exeter.

The ship we came over on has gone, and our last link with the United States seems gone; we are cut off for a time at least.

You must excuse this dirty paper, but it is pretty hard to keep anything clean around here, as we have no place to keep it.

If the expression "Distance makes the heart grow fonder" is true, I surely love you all at home with a love that can not be expressed in words.

DEAREST M. AND F.: I expect you have been pretty anxious about not hearing from me for so long. I have had no time at all to write. From our rest camp we went direct to the trenches and went over the top on the third wave. I can't exactly explain how I felt, but was not a bit scared. We lost hardly any men, and of those that we did lose most of them were wounded. We dug ourselves in up on a hill, and here we were a fine target for the Boche guns; but we suffered very little. We are now billeted far behind the lines for an indefinite length of time. I have much to tell you when I get home which I can not put in my letters, which will probably be few and far between. Do not worry about me, as I have no fear and expect to be home with you within six months. I am now in the regiment that did all the work you read so much about in the papers, and I am proud to be in it. Its name will always bring back proud memories to the hearts of the American people. We do a good deal of hiking over here. We hiked over —— miles last night just to get here, and we have made three other hikes just about as long

We are billeted in barns now, and are making friends with all the different kinds of cooties that ever were made, and they sure are a great pest. Mother, thee won't need worry about ordering meals for me when I get home, as I am going to order all the meals for about two weeks and have just what I want. I will just rest when we are all together again and enjoy life for a few months; then business. When I do come home, I am going to walk right in on you without a word, so you may from now on live in expectation. It sure will be a happy moment for me when I get off the train at old P. W. In this drive I was in—for when we went over the top we started one of the biggest drives the war has yet seen, the barrage the Allies sent over was the largest in the war. It was fierce from the looks of the Hun trenches. We pushed the enemy back about 15 miles in four days, there our —— ——. All the other fronts are the same way too, steadily moving toward the border. I have eaten several meals in German territory already.

All's well, with dear love.

MY DEAREST MOTHER: I have now received all the mail that you have written me, as my replacement mail came last night, about 40 letters, and I stayed up until after 12 reading it, and it was just like an evening at home.

Yes; it is a shame that you have not been getting my mail, and I have been writing so often too, two or three times a week. I also got your cable last night, and it was most cheering.

I was thinking about the squad of men I had when we first came over, before we were put into the Fifth; we have had rather hard luck, for out of the eight men, two have been killed, four severely wounded, and two slightly wounded. I feel sorry for the families of the two dead heroes, for they were both nice, refined boys. I can fully realize how you have worried over not getting mail, for I had the same worry for four months; of course, yours have been worse, for your thoughts must have had me in some tight places, and you were right, but by God's good will and your love I came through O. K. I guess the most narrow escape I had was at Thiacourt, in the St. Mihiel drive. A boy and myself were down there on a detail while the Germans were shelling the town very heavily. We heard a big shell coming and got up close to a wall. (Bill as a runner showed the way to the boy who had been detailed to take water to the front line.)

Bu-r-m—Bang! We had our faces pressed up against the wall, and when I looked to see if Ted was O. K. I saw him on the ground with his head blown entirely off; it was a terrible sight, and I thought, suppose it had been me, and I thought of you two at home. I then did a thing which was very hard to do. I first carried the body to a hole, then the head. I nearly died carrying that bloody head of my friend. I put it in the hole with the body and covered it up, and put a little white stone, with a piece of a board on the grave for a marker, and said: "Greater love has no man than this, that he lay down his life for his friends." I then went back to those dark, lonely trenches or little single holes in the ground, and on the way back I cried for that dear, dead boy back there in his lonesome grave, real tears, the first cry I have had in France.

Oh, how I long to get back to you and try and forget some of the horrible things I have seen. Will close, as I am tired and must go to bed. All my love.

BILLY.

DEAR MRS. THAYER:

I am very sorry to write that Billy was wounded October 5; so far as I can find out, the wound was slight, so do not worry if you do not hear from him for a time; tell him I was also hit twice, and am in the hospital now. Billy and all our boys will be home soon, as the war is almost finished. Billy is a real man, Mrs. Thayer, and a son to be proud of.

Sincerely,

Private BENJAMIN F. SCOTT,
Fifty-fifth Company, Fifth Regiment,
United States Marines.

BASE HOSPITAL NO. 27,
Angers, France, October 5, 1918.

DEAREST M. AND F.:

I have a bed, a nice soft bed with sheets and blankets, and it seems as if I am in Heaven.

We started a drive in the Champaigne, one of the German strongholds, and we sure did drive for the Germans are now some 20 miles farther back than when we started. We started on the 1st; on the 3d I was wounded in the back with a piece of high-explosive shell. The wound is not dangerous, only painful, but the doctor says the pain will not last long. Six of us were lying in a shell hole when a big 6-inch shell exploded about 10 feet away from us; three of the boys were hurt, not badly; I was one. This is a fine place, good food, good care is taken of us, and above all we are away from that terrible front line. I have been over the top five times within five weeks, and I have had enough. This last time we were under a steady shell fire for 68 hours, a terrible strain on our nerves.

From the looks of things now, we will all see home before many months are up, and I think this division, the Second, will be one of the first ones to get home. I sure do hope so. Am a little tired now, so will close and write again in a few days. Do not worry the least bit, as I am all right, and in a place where there is no danger.

Your own loving,

HOSPITAL 27, October 11, 1918.

DEAREST M. AND F.: Got up and walked some to-day, and I am sure feeling fine; the long rest away from the front line is doing me good.

I think our division is going to be cited again for the good work it did in our last drive; it was our division that started the big drive in the Champagne which you have read so much about; the French were with us. In one place where we had to lie down in shell holes we were so mixed up that there was a blue devil in the same hole with me; the hole seemed small for two, but we got into it just as if we had been two brothers, which in a way we are—brothers in arms. I think that instead of getting a motor cycle when I get home I will fix up a nice room, buy some more books, etc.—things that will be of use to me in the future life. Don't you think that is a better plan?

We have not been paid for about two months, so when we do get it it will be quite a nice sum, and there is not much to spend it on over here. All you can get is wine, and I have not wasted one sou on that, and do not intend to. I have not had one drink of liquor in France, and am glad of it, dearest mother and father. I am living over here as I know you would want me to. I would not be ashamed to let you see a moving picture of my life over here, but you sure would be shocked at some of the hardships your gay young man has gone through. I will tell you all pretty soon, I hope. The fall here in France reminds me of that in New Hampshire at our place. I have seen some lovely color, not so bright, but just as many colors. I am worried about Scotty; I do not know whether he is wounded or not, as I did not see him when I was carried off. I wish I knew where he was and if he was hit. I hope he was as lucky as I was, and did not get hurt very badly. I have often thought, mother mine, which would be the sadder when the war is over, the mother who had a son buried in France or a mother who had a son who was a slacker. I would rather have my son dead than a slacker, and I guess most all feel that way.

Will close and try and write again soon.

BILLY.

BASE HOSPITAL NO. 27, FRANCE.

DEAREST M. AND F.:

I leave the hospital to-day for a replacement camp, where I will wait until I am able to get back to my company. I am entirely well, and feel much better for the good rest I have had while here.

It now looks as if we were able to see light at last, for it looks as if peace was coming nearer to end this bloody fight and appalling slaughter. I sure do hope that the Germans are about to surrender. I don't see how they can help it, at the rate they are retreating now. They leave all behind them and run. In the last drive I was in we took 28,000 prisoners and over 200 big guns. All this was done in a few days too.

I surely look forward to getting home and being with thee and Dad. I fear my nerves are sadly unstrung; it is the fearful explosions that do it when we are being shelled by Fritz; then there is always that feeling of whether you will get there or not; you do not notice that while going over the top, but when you lie in a hole for a couple of hours, with big shells exploding around, then is when you do a lot of thinking. You do not want to, but you can't help it. Its funny, but I always think about the good old times we used to have in New Hampshire. It all comes back to me just like a big history book were in front of me all the while. One good thing is that we do not stay in the front line very long; four days and nights is the most I have had. When we come back from the front, we do a lot of hiking and at the end we get billeted in some pretty little French town 10 or 15 miles behind the lines. Here we do a little drilling, have numerous inspections, and above all, we eat, for it is here that we have good food, making up for the little we get while at the front. I have been three days on one box of hard tack and one canteen full of water; most of that went the first day, and we were very hungry and thirsty the day we got out. The number of airplanes over here is huge; when you are at the front, you can not look up without seeing 10 or 12 in the air. The fights we see in the air are very exciting, but it gives you a funny feeling when you see one or the other come down in flames. When we were at ——, we shot one down with rifle fire; the pilot was wounded in 11 places, but the man lived; a soldier is a pretty hard thing to kill for all you hear.

I love you with all my heart, and am living as I know you would want me to, and again I know I will be glad later that I lived a good life while I was here, where there were so many temptations. My motto is, "Keep your gun and your mind clear." All my love, dear folks,

BILLY.

EVACUATION CAMP,
Angers, France, October 22, 1918.

MOTHER DEAREST: My, I will be glad to get back to the company, for I may have a letter there from thee, which I am very anxious to get. I sent a Christmas card yesterday, which you put on a little box you can send me Christmas.

I wrote Uncle Fred a nice letter this morning as I think he is interested in what we do over here. He has seen the kind of life we lead and knows what it is. We take a walk each morning here around part of the town; Angers is a pretty place—by far the nicest I have seen in France yet; the others were all dirty like the slums of New York.

We are all very anxious for the war to end, but still we do not want it to end until Germany is licked all around, and it begins to look as if she was. We will have lots to tell when we get home. I can just picture us sitting around a nice meal, then I will tell you all about it, but the good meal part looks best to me; we have good enough food, but always the same; it will be variety that will be so nice.

I have lots of plans made which I may carry out when I get home, then again I may not, but it is fun to make them anyway.

I have one worry, and that is about Scotty; I wish I knew if he is all right. Going through together what we fellows have to go through makes you very fond of your "pal." If we get through all right, I will want you to meet him, for he is a fine boy, indeed, a nice, clean, straightforward fellow, one you can trust at all times.

I am well and happy as conditions permit, but none of your friends are around with you when you are away from your own platoon, the rest of the fellows who were in my platoon happened to get to some other hospital; of this I am very sorry. I will feel much better when I get back with them. Do not worry about me, I will come back to you all right. I have had two dreams about home and both of them were about my return, and above all my great love for you two and yours for me will carry me through all danger; and best of all, I think the war is over.

Your own,

BILLY.

EVACUATION CAMP,
Angers, France, October 25, 1918.

DEAREST M. AND F.: Still here, but am entirely well, and am just waiting to be sent away. About another week, I guess, then a week or so in getting back to my company. We just came back from our daily walk, and it was a pretty walk, too. Out through an old woods, under big trees, that are now in their full autumn color, and they are very pretty indeed. We went for about half a mile, then fell out for a half-hour rest, in which we just walked around near where we fell out, we got back just in time for lunch, so now I have the rest of the p. m. to myself, so I thought that a letter to you would always be welcome.

Two propaganda balloons (I don't know if that is the way to spell it, but I mean the balloons that we send into the enemy's lines with news) went over and we do not know whether they were ours or the Huns. They are about the size of a Fourth of July balloon.

My, what a success the loan was! It sure cheered us up to know that you stand behind us so strongly, and it will not do the Huns any good when they find it out, either. Mother, if thee sees any good war pictures in New York that are not too expensive, will thee get one once in a while for me, as I want them in my room when I get home. A good way to get some is to buy that English magazine when it has an unusually pretty colored picture in it.

How hard it is to write letters! You can say so little that is on your mind. If I could only get some of your letters I would be able to write more interesting ones than I do, but you know that I am all right and intend to stay all right until I get home. Then, after going through all this, I will probably catch cold and feel miserable for a few days. Wouldn't that be funny? Will close and rest a little, and will write again to-morrow. More letters are better than a few long ones, and then I may have some more news.

Yours son,

BILLY.

SOMEWHERE IN FRANCE, November 16, 1918.

DEAREST PARENTS: I have received both of your letters, and it was a blessing to get them—the first mail I have received since I have been in France. They were both fine letters and very cheering to your boy over here.

"The war is over." My, how good that sounds to us boys who have been fighting so long. I have lived through it all, and, thank God, I will see you again and be able to tell you all about it. There were times indeed when my life was not worth much; but these are all over, so let us be happy and look forward to that joyful meeting we will have some time in the near future.

I will now try and tell you how the end of the war came to the Fifth Marines, fighting on the Meuse River. I got back from the hospital just in time to get in the last great battle of the war. The night before we went over the top for the last time was spent in a big, dark woods. Here we underwent 10 hours of the most frightful artillery fire I have ever been in, the Germans using everything from a 1-pound shell to great 10-inch shells (sea bags). It was in this woods that several hundred Americans were killed and hundreds wounded. We went over the top at about midnight in a fog so thick that you could not see 10 feet in front of you. The Germans at once opened up with their machine guns and caused some loss. We went down into a field bordering the Meuse River and ran into a German barrage almost as bad as the first one. Our engineers had put two pontoon bridges across the river. Over there we went, our platoon being the first to cross. After crossing the river we lay along the bank for a while, then walked up for about a mile. We rested here for a couple of hours, and it was here that we captured a German, who, we think, saved all our lives. It was then the morning of the 11th, about 7 o'clock, the day the treaty was signed. We had planned to take our objective, which was a hilltop about half a mile away. The German said not to do it, as the war would be over at 11 o'clock. We had heard rumors of this but were not sure, so decided to wait. While we lay there we could hear the boom of our guns and the screaming of the German shells, which were exploding just across the river.

At about 10 minutes of 11 we all began to get nervous, as it was life or death to us if they did not cease at 11, for we would have been terribly cut up if we had taken the hill, for it was full of mines and machine guns. At 7 minutes of 11 by my watch—which I could hardly hold still enough to see, I was so nervous—there was a final roar; all was quiet, not a gun broke that heavenly stillness: then from the hillside above us poured hundreds of gray-clad men singing and shouting, "Le guerre finis (French, so we could know what they meant). It was then that I first saw Germans that we did not try and kill. They came down, started shaking hands and swapping rings, etc. This ended the greatest war in history, and I thank God that I lived to see the end and to know that I could once again see all that is dear to me.

This letter is written in German ink, on German paper, and is written with a German pen, and will be mailed from a town that has been in the hands of the Germans for four long years. As we go through these towns we are given flowers and blessed by the poor French, who, I fear, have been badly treated by the Germans. One old lady told me that she got only enough flour every 25 days to bake one good-sized loaf of bread. They live on cabbage and turnips. I at once gave her my meal ration of good bread.

Give my love to all. It is beginning to snow now, my first snow in France.

Your own man child,

BILLY.

I am just the same boy you sent away last summer, only a little more settled, I guess. Feel like staying at home more and not "gadding around," as dear, middle-aged Dad would say. (Not old, middle aged.) So is my darling mother.

Dad, I am going to bring you a 5-pound box of peanut brittle when I come home.

BILL.

SEGENDORF, GERMANY, December 20.

MY DEAR BRGTHER GEORGE,
Private, United States Army:

My, it has been a long while since I have written you, but then the past six months I have been pretty busy all the time.

I will try to tell you in a few words what I have been through since I have been in Europe. I landed at Brest August 27, and went into camp there for 10 days. From here we were sent in box cars up to within hiking distance of the St. Mihiel front. We were on this front for five days, being pretty heavily shelled; but that is about all. It was here that the company I was in shot down a Hun plane with rifle fire. Details I will tell you when I see you. We were billeted after this drive for about two weeks, then proceeded to the Champagne front to take Mount Blanc, where the French would not advance. We took it, but paid heavily. It was at Mount Blanc that I was wounded. I was hit below the knee on the morning of the fourth day of the drive by machine-gun bullet; went to the regimental dressing station at Somme-Py (it was here that we went over the top on the first day); was dressed, and a few hours later skipped and got back to the front line.

We went over again in the morning, and at 2.30 p. m. I was hit in the hip with a piece of shrapnel. The shell exploded very close, killing three and wounding two—another fellow and myself. About four hours later I woke up back at Somme-Py, feeling pretty stiff. My leg felt rather stiff, and I asked for a look at it, as I was then being dressed. It was a wound about 4 inches long, and a piece of shell had gone in and glanced off the bone and stopped. I have the piece now. From Somme-Py we had a tiresome journey to Angers, where I remained nearly six weeks. I got back to my outfit just in time to get in the last few days of the great Meuse drive, which was indeed a hot one. We were under fierce artillery fire right up until 11 o'clock November 11. About a week after fighting ceased we started on our hike into Germany and finally through the Rhine. We have been in this town about a week, and I think we may stay here until we are relieved to go home. Oh, George, what a day it will be when we all get together again! I have seen so much blood and terror that it will be like heaven to get back to our dear mother and father, won't it, brother dear? There were times when I gave up all hope of seeing any of you again, but I was lucky enough to get there, and now that it is over, I am glad that I went through it. Will close now, as I want to get a letter home. I pray God that we will all be together soon.

Your affectionate

BILL.

SEGENDORF, GERMANY, December 26, 1918.

DEAREST MOTHER: Now that the war is over and you know that I am safe, I will tell you about my trip back from Angers. I got aboard a train at Angers—first-class passage, think of that—where before I have always ridden in a box car carrying 40 men or 8 horses. From Angers I went to Lamaris, a large camp where new troops are outfitted, and wounded also. I remained here four days, sleeping on a floor and lining up for my meals with 4,000 other fellows. I have stood in chow line as long as three hours, and it rained every day I was there. From Lamaris I went to Verennes, a very interesting trip indeed, for I made the jaunt, 100 miles, riding in a first-class train. The latter part was made on a sand car, which, by the way, was full of nice wet sand. I spent a day and a night on this, rolling up in my blankets during the night. Reached Verennes in the late afternoon—that is, what is left of it, for it has been bombarded by both the Allies and the Germans off and on for four years. It is only a few miles from Verdun. As I said, I reached there late in the afternoon, was given a place to sleep in a tin house full of hay. It was fine and soft, and I was just in the middle of a nice nap when an explosion so fierce that it knocked my cap off—I always sleep with my hat on when sleeping in hay, for several reasons—broke the stillness of the night. We were being bombed by the Huns. They dropped four in all, and every one fell within 500 yards of my berth. Not a person was killed—several hurt. One went off and a car full of jam was entirely ruined. We got the jam in pails the next day. I was here four days and nights, and we were bombed three of the nights. The last night one of the machines was hit by an antiaircraft shell and fell. The pilot and bomber were both killed, one instantly and the other died on the way to the hospital.

From Verennes I had a 70-mile ride on a truck full of rations for the men on the line. Went to Fosse, just where regimental headquarters was, and from there to Beaumont, 3 miles from where we crossed the Meuse on the night of the 10th. Here we were shelled by the Germans all night, at intervals of 2 minutes between each shell. We had just entered the town when the first shell fell; it was a big one, made a hole big enough to put the whole truck in and killed 7 mules, wounded 17 men, and ruined 2 ambulances that were standing there. Some one yelled at us that we had 2 minutes before the next one; we went on, and sure enough, in exactly 2 minutes another came utterly destroying a small church, not an unusual thing for a shell to do.

From Beaumont I went to the front line alone at 4 o'clock in the morning. The crossing of the Meuse was set for that day, and my dear pals in the Fifth Marines had gone over the top at about 3 a. m. It took me 2 hours to go about 2 miles, half the time was spent on my face in the ditch, as all the back area was being heavily shelled. It was very dark and foggy when I got where they had crossed the river. It was easy to tell the place for many bodies lay by the way. Oh, such fine men to be sacrificed for those pigs who fired directly at them with their artillery from a hill on the other side. The Germans told us later that they had direct range on us with 27 big guns. The machine-gun fire was not so heavy when I got there as it was when the boys had crossed, so I managed to get over unhurt but with a bullet hole through my coat sleeve just cutting the skin. I did not know where my company was, so I spent the rest of the morning in a nice big shell hole, that is, until 11 o'clock, for this was the great day on which the fighting ceased. After 11 o'clock I joined the company, and was sure glad to see my friends and all the boys. They are the finest fighters in the world, the Yanks are.

I have told you before what happened after 11, so I will not write it again. You can let this go in the "Guide" if you wish to, so the people in Port can see that their boys fought hard right to the end.

Will close, as it is 11.15 p. m. and I am tired.

Lots of love, dears,

BILLY.

JANUARY 25, 1919.

MY DARLING: So thee had influenza? Well, its lucky I did not know it until it was over, for I would have been in the hospital with a nervous breakdown instead of some harmless mumps, the swelling of which has entirely gone down, but I have to stay here 14 days. I have only been here 4 now, so that means 10 days more of rest for me. I sure did have a fine Christmas from you all; just listen, the money—$20, $5, from Aunt Jessie, 4 cakes from England, candy from uncle, his address was shown on the carton, I will write and thank him for them, but I know who the real, dear giver was, and best of all the little Xmas box with the watch in it. This I got first; just mentioned it last.

As I lie in bed now I look right out on the Rhine, which at most times is full of queer looking boats going up slowly, for the current is very swift, and going down rapidly. It is a queer river, such a funny color, and so treacherous looking. I guess all things German are alike, including the Germans themselves. I will tell thee a horrible sight I saw enacted on the battle field near Verdun.

Two men were carrying a stretcher bearing a wounded Hun. I was looking at them without much interest, for we saw so many cases like it, when suddenly I tried to call out, but could not even utter a sound. The German pulled a big automatic out of his clothes and shot that brave stretcher boy in the back, killing him instantly; the other man did a thing which some might have considered cruel. I think it was too good for the Hun. Being a stretcher bearer, he had no arms, so he picked up a club, and struck the Hun in the face with the end of the stick. From then on the Hun had a hole for a face; he had no face at all, just a bloody hole, and I looked at that hole with delight; they then dumped him off on the ground, and about two minutes after a high-explosive shell did for him, blew him to pieces. Such is the reward of the wicked. I am going to get dad a nice knife here; they have beauties over here, and it would be nice for him to have a knife from Coblentz. I have an amethyst breastpin for thee, a plain but unique setting, and a lovely stone. I have things from the battle field for Bob and George and Seth, etc. Just small things, but from the front, which will please them more than things I could buy in stores. I have a fine iron cross that I found at the Champagne the day I was wounded; about an hour before it came off a dead officer. I hope they don't keep us over here much longer, for it is terribly tiresome, and home is always in our minds; and, mother, oh, that word; it keeps me alive, just to know that she is waiting for me; thy kiss when I get back will bring heaven to earth for me. Be careful, my darling, don't work too hard; thee has done so much, let the others do some. God bless and keep thee for me, dear. Thy own,

BILLY.

SEGENDORF, February 21, 1919.

DAD: Two fine letters from you in the last two days. You always have so much news to tell; they are just like a nice story; mother's are just the same. My, I didn't really know that you thought that I was really lost, but I got a letter from M. F. to-night, and she said that she felt as if her own brother had been lost while you were so worried about me, and she seemed quite pleased to know that I had been found, if you may call it such. I am so glad that you liked my letters and think them interesting. I try to make them so, but am not much on writing descriptions, but will be able to tell you some fine stories when I get back. I intend to write my experience on three fronts in a little notebook; then I will be able to read them to you, just a little personal account of these three drives. Tell mother I think her idea about tan for my den is fine; it will go well with me, too. I also intend to try a brown suit when I get home; I think it would go pretty well with me, and I have never tried it before.

Will now tell you a little story about the Champagne front, rather an experience than a story. At about 7 o'clock the night of September 27, we got into some French trucks and rode until, I should say, about 1 o'clock in the morning. After getting off the truck we hiked about 15 miles, passing through several ruined towns and big woods absolutely torn to pieces. We took up a position in reserve of the Fourth French Army, under Gen. Gourand. We remained here in single-man dugouts for two days and were not bothered by the German artillery at all. On the night of the 29th we moved up in support, and here the real hardships of the front came to us again. For two days we had no hot food at all. Scotty and I got so hungry that we went out and collected the bread that the French had thrown away, scraped the dirt off it, and then ate it with relish. We also ate the "monkey meat," canned meat they had left, a very foolish stunt, for it had been opened and left in cans for two days; but hunger forces anything. Well, going over as soon as we got to our position I got a gas watch—if they threw over gas shells, I was to give the alarm and we would don our masks. We were on the bank of a railroad track; the bank was about 40 feet high and offered fine shelter. As I was saying, I got the first watch and cautiously climbed up on the bank and stood up there absolutely still, as we were so near the lines that a Hun sniper could easily see me if I moved. It was a clear night, with a lovely full moon, almost as light as day, and I must have been a fine target silhouetted on the bank. Scotty called me. He was in our little dugout, which we shared. I turned and looked down the bank. Swish, thud, went a bullet and lodged itself in a telephone post. After that I stayed flat on my stomach looking out over the battle field, which was aflood with the light of star shells and was a very weird sight; and the lone crash of a rifle now and then, and once every so often the tap, tap, tap of a machine gun. At 5 o'clock the next morning we went over the top, and as we went down on an old track in extended order we were all whistling a merry tune to help cheer ourselves up. I felt more like Chopin's Funeral March, and I wondered if his march would have been any different if he had seen these terrible sights. In the place where we went over the French sent out tanks to destroy the pill boxes—machine-gun nests. They sent out 28 of them, and the Germans destroyed 26 of them with direct fire from their famous Austrian 88's. Then we went over. Will tell you the rest later. All my love,

BILLY.

SEGENDORF, GERMANY, March 16, 1919.

MOTHER MINE: Well, I have seen Pershing. He reviewed the Second Division a few days ago, and it was a very impressive affair indeed. He said we looked the best of any of the troops that he had inspected, and they numbered about 750,000. He also complimented our captain on the appearance of the Fifty-fifth Company.

Ben has gone home, and I miss him a good deal; we were such close friends, having been through so much together.

To-day I took a long trip up the Rhine, and it was beautiful indeed. I wish thee could have seen it.

I think it is fine that thee is going west with Uncle Fred, but be careful and do not overdo thyself, for I want thee well when I get back. I have had several chances to go "west" myself while over here, but something prevented it. (Joke.)

With dear love,

BILLY.

A BIRTHDAY LETTER TO MY DARLING MOTHER, WRITTEN A YEAR TO THE DAY AFTER MY ENTRANCE INTO THE UNITED STATES MARINE CORPS.

COBLENZ, June 1, 1919.

MY DEAREST: Thy birthday letter came last night, and what a letter it was, dear.

Thee said George had a locket that he kept while he was over here. Well, I have a little picture of thee that has seen its hard times. During the fighting it was rolled up and put inside of an empty cartridge and tied around my neck, because if I should have been badly wounded and unconscious my clothes might have been taken off without my knowing it, and I would not have lost it for anything. It has also been inside the lining of my gas mask. It was there the night of the big German counter-attack at Mont Blanc Ridge, in Champagne. During the attack a great deal of gas was sent over, and we had our masks off and on for the greater part of the night. It was in this counter-attack, the night of October 3, a year ago, that we pulled off a new stunt. When the Germans came over we went out to meet them, instead of waiting for them. It all happened in the dead of night, the only light being from the star shells and the very red light that bursting shells make. The Germans were so surprised at our new way that they did not put up much of a fight and went back to their trenches, but we followed and gained 2 kilometers that we were supposed to have taken the next day. For this our regiment was cited by the French.

It was here that I bayoneted the only man that I killed in that way. It happened this way: The gunnery sergeant and I were in a shell hole a little in advance of the rest. A man had been wounded on our left and one of the men of the Red Cross ambulance unit went out there under that fierce fire and brought him in. While he was doing this the Germans let up in their fire. The man, thinking that they were respecting the Red Cross on his arm, stood up after depositing the wounded man on the stretcher. Then, as he bent over to pick up his end of the stretcher, a German machine gunner opened up on him and put 16 bullets in the middle of his back. Well, the gunner and I saw the machine gunner at the same time. He was about 100 feet from us, but we just saw red at that low-down trick of his. We did not hesitate a bit, but got right up and ran right at him. The sergeant took him from the right and I took him on the left. He turned his gun on the sergeant, but had to stop and put in a new belt of shells. Here was my chance. I was about 6 feet from him when he was ready to fire again. If I had waited to bring my rifle up and sight it, he would have killed the sergeant, so I took my rifle and threw it with all my force, just a chance that it would kill him or stop his firing. It stopped him. The bayonet struck him full in the back; it was going with such force that it went right through him. It saved the sergeant, though, so bother the Dutchman. It was the first Hun I ever killed at close range, but I did not bat an eye. He got what was coming to him, and I thank God that I was given the chance to avenge that lad he had killed.

About an hour after this the German counter-attack came. The gunner that was with me was killed, and I got a small piece of shell splinter behind the knee, which I got fixed up, and came back to the front again, for I could not think of the boys up there without me; but I had to leave them the next day; but as I was unconscious when I left I did not know it. I am glad I was, for I would not have wanted to leave; but I would have had to just the same, on account of the great loss of blood, for I lay wounded in a ditch for two hours before they found me, and when they did get me I had to crawl the last hundred yards to the dressing station, as both my stretcher bearers were killed by a shell and I was thrown out of the stretcher. It was the explosion of this shell that I got something that I have never told you about. I was stone deaf for two weeks and coughed up blood for about four days; could eat nothing at all for about a week. In 20 days I lost 38 pounds; it does not seem possible, but when I went in I weighed 150 and when I got back to Angers I weighed 112. I was a skeleton. Nothing but bones. Now I have told you something that I was not going to tell you until I got home. I did not even tell Uncle Town while I was with him, but as this is a birthday letter to my darling, I had to tell her the biggest thing that ever happened to me in my life, and it happened in the last year of my teens. God bless thee, my darling; I so often thank God that I was spared to thee and Dad. It was a close shave, but I got there O. K., and I guess it was God and your love that did it. I have been in hell, but I am the same Bill that left you a year ago.

I am sending some pictures taken here in Coblenz when Gen. Foch was here. They are pretty good, and I don't believe you have any actual photos of him back in the States taken by some one you know and who loves you. I will send them under separate cover.

Well, this is quite a letter and you don't know what love goes with it. The love of a soldier for the dearest mother and father in the world. I have so much to tell you that I can't write it. Love to George and F. K.'s.

MEMORANDUM ON THE OPERATIONS OF THE COAST GUARD DURING THE WAR.

On April 6, 1917, the date of the declaration of war against Germany by the United States, the entire Coast Guard passed from the control of the Secretary of the Treasury to that of the Secretary of the Navy, and has continued to this date to operate as a part of the Navy. Coast Guard headquarters at Washington has functioned as a bureau of the Navy Department; the various field units, except the depot, academy, office of the supervisor of lifeboats, and the Coast Guard general stores, have operated under the direct command of the heads of certain naval groups in foreign waters and along our coasts.

Plans for the coordination of the Coast Guard and Navy in the event of war had been worked out and were published to the service during the month preceding the war in a confidential order. By it each unit of the Coast Guard was assigned a definite line of action in the general mobilization, whereby all would immediately begin to operate under a naval command specifically named in the order for each unit. The dispatches putting the order into effect were cleared on the day war was declared. Units affected included 22 cruising cutters, 14 harbor cutters and launches, and 280 coast stations, with a personnel of approximately 229 commissioned officers, 404 warrant officers, and 3,500 enlisted men, increased during the war to a maximum of 438 warrant officers and 6,100 enlisted men, with no increase in the number of commissioned officers.

All units affected by the mobilization order were assigned by it to naval districts, but six cruising cutters were within a few days taken from the districts and assigned to the Atlantic Patrol Squadron. Four of these, with two other cruising cutters, were sent abroad for duty in the war zone. These six vessels left the United States individually between the dates of August 15 and September 20, 1917. One of them was sunk in the war zone by enemy action, the others returned to the United States between the dates January 3 and July 1, 1919.

The cutters attached to naval districts acted as patrol vessels on the coast, convoyed and towed along the coast or to offshore points various craft used in connection with the supply fleet, were detailed to hunt for enemy submarines reported on the coast, and were sent, when the necessity arose, to assist vessels in distress.

The coast stations, with their surfman patrols, formed an armed force for observation and communication on the coasts and Great Lakes. They were especially valuable in this respect along the Atlantic seaboard at the times of submarine attacks on our coast. They continued to perform work of rescue and assistance as occasion required. The annual report of the service for the only full fiscal year of active operations in a war status—the report of 1918—shows that the cutters and stations maintained their record in this regard with 1,250 persons rescued from peril and vessels to the value of $15,198,322 assisted, having 11,084 persons on board.

The peace-time batteries of the cruising cutters comprised from two to four 6-pounder guns; these were generally replaced or augmented by larger guns of the 3-inch or 4-inch rapid-fire type to a maximum on a few of the vessels of four 4-inch, this being considered the heaviest battery any of the cutters could carry to advantage. Their armament further included the usual outfit of small arms, machine guns, and depth charges of the 50-pound or 300-pound sizes, varying with the nature of the duties to which they were assigned. To the outfit of small arms on the harbor cutters was added in most cases a 1-pounder gun. Small arms were distributed to the coast stations and carried on patrol by the surfmen.

The communication system of the Coast Guard and the organization which had been created for its maintenance proved of great value in connection with our war measures. At the date of the declaration of war the service had in operation about 1,000 miles of telephone cable and land wire linking up its stations, with connection to commercial exchanges and lines. The system at that time was not sufficiently complete for Coast Defense purposes, and measures were speedily taken to extend and perfect it. To-day it covers the Atlantic coast from Quoddy Head to Key West. All the important lighthouses have land wire or cable run to them linking up with the general system. On the Gulf coast cables were laid and new lines constructed to outlying lighthouses and to all Coast Guard stations. The telephone lines on the Great Lakes were overhauled and extended to include all Coast Guard stations and important light stations. New lines on the Pacific coast were built to the principal light stations, so that communication facilities to all important lookout points are now provided. The Coast Guard lines at present include 3,000 miles of land wire and 400 miles of cable.

The Tampa, one of the Coast Guard cutters, was sunk with all hands in the Bristol Channel on the night of September 26, 1918, by enemy torpedo, and 111 officers and men were lost. This was the heaviest single loss suffered by the American naval forces operating in the war zone during the war.

THE AMERICAN RED CROSS.

[Compiled by Mrs. Dean Mason.]

The United States Sanitary Commission, organized to assist the Army Medical Bureau in caring for the wounded, in preserving and restoring health, and securing the general comfort of the soldiers during the trying times of the Civil war, 1861–1865, was the precursor of the American Red Cross. Although as early as 1859 M. Jean Henri Dunant, of Geneva, Switzerland, having witnessed the horrors of war, and with the object in mind of alleviating the suffering of the sick and wounded upon the battle field, published a book, "Un Souvenir de Solferina," in which he vividly described these horrors and proposed that societies should be formed in every country in time of peace to train nurses and to collect supplies in case of need. The result of M. Dunant's agitation was an organization formed after the Geneva Convention, in 1864, and ratified by 14 countries.

So successful was the Sanitary Commission during the Civil War that the Geneva Convention received its representative, who by reports and by photographs was able to demonstrate the practical and efficient work accomplished, thereby allaying the fears of those who thought the plans proposed for Red Cross societies throughout the world impracticable. Many conferences and congresses have been held since this first meeting at Geneva in 1864. In July, 1881, through the heroic efforts of Miss Clara Barton, a Red Cross society was incorporated in the District of Columbia under the name of the "American Association of the Red Cross." Miss Barton, who had herself been a nurse in the Civil War, was appointed its president. In June, 1900, the American National Red Cross was incorporated by act of Congress, and in January, 1905, it was reincorporated and granted a new charter, the one now in force. The international committee at Geneva is regarded as the central committee of all, and the league of Red Cross societies recently formed, with its world-wide opportunity for the amelioration of the conditions of mankind, has grown to such proportions that the original headquarters in Geneva is too small to house its activities.

During the period from 1881 to 1917, the year the United States entered the Great War, it is estimated that the Red Cross expended approximately $18,900 for the alleviation and prevention of human suffering, such as the San Francisco earthquake and fire, in 1906; Chinese famine, 1907; Messina earthquake, 1908; and other great catastrophes needing immediate and organized assistance. The Red Cross is a volunteer relief organization having official Government sanction, and as such assists the Army and Navy whenever called upon, but is not, however, a Government department.

The President of the United States is president of the American Red Cross by election of the general board. Representatives of the State, War, Navy, and Justice Departments of the Government are members of the central committee. All Red Cross accounts are audited by the War Department and an annual report is made to Congress through the Secretary of War.

To facilitate activities during the present World War, on May 10, 1917, President Wilson appointed a War Council of seven members; as chairman, he selected Mr. Henry P. Davison. On March 1, 1919, its work accomplished, the War Council ceased to exist and the society reverted to a peace-time organization.

There are six classes of individual membership: Annual members, at $1 per year; contributing members, at $5 per year; sustaining members, at $10 per year; life members, upon payment of $50; patrons, who pay $100.

During the war the cash contributions of the American people to the support of the Red Cross in less than one year totaled more than $300,000,000. Before the World War the highest membership attained was 328,000, divided among 555 chapters. On November 1, 1917, there were more than 5,000,000 members and 3,287 chapters, and before the armistice was signed there were 20,000,000 members, not including the 8,000,000 school children enrolled in the Junior Red Cross. The tremendous increase in work and responsibility during the war made a new system imperative; accordingly the State, Territorial, and insular activities of the United States and foreign Red Cross chapters were grouped into 14 divisions, each with its own manager, all, however, under the direction of a general manager at Washington.

The future peace program of the Red Cross is to render of permanent service the wonderful organization built up during the war by the loyalty and cooperation of the whole American people; the fulfillment of relief work undertaken for the war veteran and suffering civilian populations in allied countries and at home; a Nation-wide crusade for the promotion of public health, including a vigorous campaign for the extension of the country's nursing facilities, and an expansion of home service for emergency-disaster relief, and to benefit the population in general.

Adding the cost of supplies to the cash contributions during the war makes a total of about $400,000,000 received. The contribution of service—knitting garments, making surgical dressings, and ministering to the soldiers in need—can not be estimated.

Two years before the country entered the war the Red Cross began enrolling its forces for a possible demand. As a result, on April 6, 1917, six complete hospital units were ready for service, and within seven weeks one of these had already reached England on its way to France, thus being the first detachment of the American Army to reach the war zone for active service. The American Red Cross activities abroad covered a wide range. During the conflict it organized 50 base hospitals, 46 ambulance companies, and assisted the Army Nurse Corps in organizing two additional base hospital units. Eight base hospital units and 17 naval hospital units were organized for the Navy, for which also a hospital was established in London.

As the official reserve of the Army and Navy Nurse Corps, to the American Red Cross fell the duty of raising regiments of nurses for war service. Over 31,000 were enrolled. Of the 17,000 nurses assigned to the Nurse Corps, all but about 1,100 being with the Army, half of whom saw foreign service.

Of course, the greatest activity of the American Red Cross in European field naturally was in France, although the Red Cross at no time sought to supplant any of the relief agencies already operating, simply strengthening them in every way possible, and accordingly assistance was given to 157 organizations. The most pressing immediate need was canteen service for the soldiers. Aid extended to overtaxed French hospitals, the establishment of hospitals, dispensaries, diet kitchens, rest houses, and convalescent huts of its own; also furnishing vast quantities of medical and surgical supplies, the value of these in one year reaching $10,000,000; supplying before the war was ended the medical and surgical supplies, wholly or in part, to half of the 5,000 hospitals of various sorts in France. It has established 7,500 military beds, and was operating several donated chateaux and rented hotels at seaside resorts as convalescent houses, in addition to 60 convalescent huts and hospital farms, which latter helped supply the hospitals with fresh food. Besides all of this and much more, the work for the French civilian population was enormous. In Russia a large amount of relief had been administered, supplying milk to 25,000 starving little ones in Petrograd, an ambulance unit of 125 cars supplying drugs, and extending help to the families of Russian soldiers, Serbian refugees, and many others. A base was established at Vladivostok, which became an important one, and a mission was sent to Archangel to care for the American troops operating there. In England the work of the American Red Cross consisted of caring for American soldiers, passing to and from the port sailors whose ships were based at English ports, furnishing hospital facilities for sick and wounded, and assistance in British relief work, including donations of money. In Italy the work grew rapidly. By the summer of 1918 over 100 American Red Cross ambulances and 25 auxiliary motor vehicles, with a personnel of 135 men, were on duty on the Italian front. Canteens were opened, hospitals established, and much civilian relief work accomplished, the benefits of which were a long step toward restoring Italian morale.

In the Balkans the work was varied. Roumania, panic stricken and exhausted, received great relief, including food, clothing, and serums and vaccines with which to combat the epidemics already gaining great headway. In Serbia quantities of food, clothing, and medicines were distributed, also seeds and implements with which to cultivate the fertile plains. Much help was given northern Greece. The work in stricken Belgium was most important and upon a very broad scale. Hospitals, caring for refugees and children orphaned and homeless, and in every way possible assisted to alleviate the suffering of innocent people attacked.

In May, 1918, a commission was sent to Switzerland extending to the sorely distressed Swiss monetary relief and building and maintaining huts, hospitals, canteens, and homes for interned soldiers. The civilian population, particularly children, received assistance. Expenditures and appropriations exceeded $2,200,000. One of the primary duties of the Swiss commission was to handle the dispatch of food and comfort boxes to American soldiers who were prisoners of war in Germany and to establish communication between them and their families. Without this aid the life in the German prison camps would have been unbearable.

In the Near East the helping hand has also been felt. A commission was sent to give assistance in the territory freed by Gen. Allenby's army.

Minor activities have been carried on in Poland, in the Azores, and Maderia Islands, Portugal, Armenia, and Syria. Also a donation of $500,000 to the Canadian Red Cross. In giving this little résumé not half has been told. The war council is finished and dissolved, but the American Red Cross has joined hands with the Red Cross of the leading nations of the world for a great and permanent good, and that the ideals and the principles which have made the American Red Cross a standard, may be known and studied. The results speak for themselves, but the methods by which these results are attained are unknown to organizations outside of our own, and for others to meet and be measured by this standard the high level of efficiency must be reached.

THE SOCIETY OF FRIENDS IN RELIEF AND RECONSTRUCTION IN FRANCE.

[By William C. Biddle.]

When in the summer of 1917 the American Red Cross sent to France a delegation, headed by Maj. Grayson M. Murphy, to study conditions and plan for future work it was a fortunate circumstance for the Friends that two members of the American Friends' Service Committee of Philadelphia crossed the Atlantic on the same ship. The cordial relationships then formed were of great value in future connections.

British Friends had been in France since the fall of 1914 as members of the French Red Cross and operating under the name La Mission de la Société des Amis. During this period they had started several hospitals, also homes for children and aged refugees, two factories for making wooden sections for demountable houses, had relief workers caring for refugees and their agricultural department, and had assisted many in getting their gardens and small farms under cultivation.

Maj. Murphy and his associates were sufficiently impressed with the work the English Friends were doing and their willingness to cooperate thoroughly with the Americans, their work then being the nature of a "going concern," that a distinct department of the American Red Cross was formed, known as the Bureau of Friends of the American Red Cross. Thus the American Friends became members of the American Red Cross, the British Friends retaining their membership in the French Red Cross. The assistance given by these two Red Cross organizations was invaluable.

Up to this time considerable sums of money had been contributed by American Friends and sent to the Friends in France, and several American volunteers had gone over and joined them. But it was not until August and September, 1917, that American workers commenced to arrive in any considerable numbers. Something more than 650 have gone over, of whom about 45 were from New York State and about 60 were women. Approximately $2,000,000 have been collected by Friends, principally from among their own members. The Mennonites also gave valuable aid in both men and money. About 50 men went over and many thousands of dollars were contributed.

The work in France has been quite varied. Before the armistice it was largely among the refugees that had been driven from their homes to many parts of France. Nearly all French doctors were with the Army, leaving the civilians in many localities entirely without medical aid. Friends established several hospitals—surgical, medical, and maternity—convalescent homes, homes for aged, and homes, schools, and playgrounds for children. Relief workers and district nurses visited the refugees to study their condition and as far as possible minister to their needs The two factories at Dole and Ornans making sectional houses had shipped the houses, knocked down, into districts in the Marne and Somme from which the Germans were driven after the first battle of the Marne, and houses were erected and occupied by returned refugees. In the big German offensive of March, 1918, the Somme was again overrun and some of these houses were destroyed. Many of them were, however, left standing by the Germans and are now again occupied by the refugees since their second return to their homes. Friends then in the Somme did heroic work helping the aged and infirm refugees and the children to get away ahead of the rapidly advancing Germans; at times the Germans were but a few hundred yards behind, coming into one edge of a village as the Friends with perhaps the last of the refugees were escaping from the other edge.

This was a new and unexpected work for them. Their companions worked night and day carrying the helpless and exhausted and wounded to places out of danger. On one trip maps and valuable papers belonging to an army headquarters were, by official request, moved to a point of safety. Canteens and kitchens were opened, where the wounded and the weary soldiers and civilians together were fed and rested and helped on their way. Few were the hours of sleep, some working 48 to 60 consecutive hours.

With the starting of the second German drive in May, near Rheims, the French civil authorities sent a hurry call to the Friends, who promptly responded with several motor trucks, doctors, nurses, medical supplies, and food. The most urgent need was found to be near Epernay and Dormans on the Marne, where many refugees had sought shelter in deep cellars that were under heavy shell fire. Here for nearly a week the same strenuous efforts were put forth as in the Somme in March. Refugees, old or infirm or sick; also children helped or carried to places of safety and fed and places found for them to sleep—sometimes a heap of straw in an old barn. From some villages prefectural records and plans showing divisions of land were carried to safety. Frequently the cars were under shell fire, and occasionally before visiting the most exposed positions were forced to wait for darkness, but though they registered many thousands of miles under these conditions no accident occurred. Nor was any member of the Friends' unit ever wounded during these two offensives or the many other times they were in districts that were being shelled or bombed.

The approach of the battle line forced the evacuation of the maternity hospital at Chalons. Chalons never fell into the hands of the Germans, but it was shelled, also bombed from aeroplanes, in the hope of destroying the railroad which passed very near the hospital, and on July 14, a few hours before the third offensive started, the military authorities gave the final word to evacuate. Arrangements had been made to receive this hospital at Mery-sur-Seine. All patients were moved to this point without accident.

During this time a number of new recruits for the work were arriving in Paris, and owing to the general confusion were unable to proceed at once to the point where they were to have begun work. Their time was very profitably employed in serving in the canteens at the stations for refugees passing through Paris. After the Battle of Chateau-Thierry, they won great praise from the American Red Cross. They spent their time at the railroad stations, frequently working all night helping to unload the hospital trains and place the wounded into the ambulances for the last stage of their journey to the hospitals.

This sudden increase in the number of refugees in southern and central France intensified the housing problem, already acute. In cooperation with the French Government Friends were able to do their part in providing shelter for the refugees in several cities. They erected houses at Troyes, at Dole, at Besancon, and, at the time of the armistice, were erecting 50 houses at Montceaux-les-Mines, a coal-mining field, where the need was particularly pressing. With the German retirement and the armistice the problem was changed again. At all of these centers they were able to help install the families in these houses and furnish them with a modicum of furniture and clothing and any assistance which was necessary.

At Lisieux, in Normandy, Friends were asked to send 2 workers to take the responsibility for 6,000 refugees.

At Le Glandier 600 Belgian children from Liege, their parents living and working under German rule, were placed in a great monastery, where Belgian professors were giving them lessons. Friends were asked to send workers to teach them to play, pitching pennies seeming to be the only pastime these city children knew. Five men and two women soon had them playing basket ball, football, baseball, and other American games. Scout training in the nearby woods was soon inaugurated, and the children never tired of listening to stories of American life, of Indians, etc. When the children were returned to Belgium after the armistice, many were the tears shed at parting, and the tears were not all in the eyes of the children.

In the winter or early spring of 1918 Mr. Homer Folks, then head of civil affairs department of the American Red Cross, asked that 300 Friends be sent over from America, not to join with the English and American group but to work directly with other American Red Cross bureaus. Friends Unit No. 2 was then formed, and until the fall of 1918 nearly all the new arrivals were loaned to the different bureaus of the civil affairs department. They were given a variety of work, built houses, hospitals, barraques, etc., for refugees, helped with traveling hygiene exhibits, with children's playground work, and model farms; in hospitals, canteens, etc.

The armistice seemingly made every refugee in France anxious to return at once to the old home, and a new field of usefulness was almost immediately opened on part of the scarred battle field of the Marne; also work long ago planned near Verdun was at last made possible. About this time the French authorities allotted different sections of the devastated area to the various relief organizations. The Friends were awarded the region lying between Clermont-en-Argonne and Verdun, a district comprising about 39 villages, several of them so badly shot up not one room remained with walls and roof undamaged.

The first work in the Verdun district took the form of repairing houses that had not been damaged beyond repair, and providing quarters in different villages for their relief workers and transport department. A convenient center for the work in this district was found in a large dairy farm called Grange-le-Comte near Clermont-en-Argonne. In January, 1919, unit No. 2, which had been working under the American Red Cross, was closed and the addition of these workers made it possible to proceed much faster than before. The provisional repairing of houses in this district was greatly hastened by the use of German prisoners, many of whom were experts and nearly all willing workers.

The French Government had recognized the work of the Société des Amis to the extent that up to this time they had furnished free of cost the lumber used in the factories making houses. From now on they furnished free sections made in French factories. This permitted the closing down of the factories at Dole and Ornans and the transfer of many workers into the devastated area to help erect these French-made sections, thus making the contribution to the reestablishment of life in these areas much more rapid and effective. The mayors of the different villages, generally the first ones to return, were consulted, lists of refugees obtained, and sites selected. If size of lot permitted, the house was erected on the former home plot. Frequently the mayor requisitioned land on the outskirts of the village and the houses were built in a group or "cité." With the lumber furnished free by the French Government and the erection of the houses, a labor of love on the part of the Friends, all their workers being volunteers, the refugees had to pay no cash for their new homes. They are, however, charged a few hundred francs against their share in such damages as may be collected some time in the future from the Germans. Latest reports from France indicate that by the end of November roofs will be over the heads of every refugee family that has returned to the area allotted to the Friends.

The agricultural department, seeing the pressing need to save the crops about the battle fields as the armies passed to the north in the fall of 1918, threw a strong force of workers into the fields and some thousands of tons of grain were reaped and thrashed that would probably have been otherwise lost owing to the lack of farm labor and the destruction of machines. In five separate centers shops were maintained for repairing agricultural machinery, and the French Army seeing the work being done placed at the disposal of this department two large groups of salvaged agricultural implements, from which many missing or obsolete parts were obtained. In one month 360 machines were repaired for the refugee farmers that otherwise were unusable.

With the help of several 3 and 5 ton motor trucks thousands of rabbits and chickens and hundreds of sheep and goats were brought into this district that had no railroad facilities, and were sold to the refugees at or below cost. It was discovered that bees had been practically exterminated in the war zone, which meant little or no fruit of certain varieties. Hundreds of hives were brought in, bee culture started, hives and swarms sold to refugees at half cost. This low price was made to encourage sales, for while it was realized the purchaser would get the honey, his neighbor who owned fruit trees might be the greater gainer from the bees, without being burdened with the care of them. Plowing and planting have been done through the spring of 1919, in some cases communal tracts on sites selected by the mayors. Some of these were divided among refugees, each to care for his own lot, others were continued as communal, each refugee doing a part of the work for the common good, the crops to be divided when harvested. In one village the damaged church was repaired, and at the first service in the church since 1914 the curé returned thanks to God and to the Société des Amis for the plowed fields that greeted the inhabitants on their return.

The relief workers seem at times to get closer to the French people, partly because their work requires a speaking knowledge of French, partly because they greet and welcome the refugee when he arrives and gets the first glimpse of the desolation where was once his home. Also they inquire into his wants and try to minister to his pressing needs. Clothing is furnished him and his family from the generous stocks sent over from the Friends in America, also those given by the American Red Cross. Orders for food or other necessaries are given him on the cooperative stores, about a dozen of which were started by the Friends in as many villages. The starting of these stores in the devastated regions devoid of railroad or other transportation was made possible only through their transport department, which had in use about 125 motors of varying capacity, from 5-ton trucks down to motor cycles with side cars. These trucks brought in food, clothing, furniture, seeds, farm implements, animals, etc., bought in wholesale centers and sold at or below cost to the refugees. These prices were often one-half to one-third and sometimes a quarter the price dealers were charging in nearest town in which was a store, and to which the refugees would have had a walk of many kilometers. These cooperative stores are now being taken over by a French cooperative society to be run permanently.

Workshops were also started, where mattresses, pillows, furniture, and other useful articles were made or repaired. Materials for embroidery were furnished the girls and women to take home, and many beautiful pieces, both white and colored, were worked and brought back. The women were paid liberally for their efforts and a ready sale was found among Army officers and members of the various relief organizations. Many thousands of francs were thus distributed among those eager workers who otherwise might have experienced difficulty in finding a profitable occupation.

Many expressions of thanks and appreciation came from the French peasants for the help they received, also from French officials, but it was at Christmas that the real reward was reaped. During the Christmas holiday season more than 6,000 children were entertained with cinemas, sleight-of-hand performances, etc., and most of them were given presents. Hours before the doors were to open the children would be waiting in the bitter cold. Their little expectant faces would brighten as the gifts were distributed, Christmas presents almost unknown to them since the war started. Dolls were the great favorites with the little girls, and in one village they were carried in all solemnity to the damaged and abandoned church and duly christened.

One of the earliest activities started by English Friends, and now the first to close down, was the medical. Mention has already been made of the dearth of doctors out of the army and the numerous hospitals, homes, and visiting nurses maintained by Friends. As demobilization proceeded and French doctors were released to take up again their practice in one locality after another, Friends withdrew their doctors and nurses to prevent competition with the French, so that by early September most of the medical work had closed, with one notable exception. The Chalons Maternity Hospital, started in 1915, has shown such a record for efficiency and low death rate, as compared with any other maternity in France, and the influence on the inmates, also on the staff, of whom many are French nurses and aids, has been so striking that the French Government has conferred the "Legion d'Honour" on Miss Edith M. Pye, an English Friend, who acted as head nurse and matron, an honor that has rarely been awarded to a woman. Plans are about completed for continuing the maternity permanently under the management of a French committee composed mainly of local government officials and prominent citizens who have seen and watched its workings. Friends have donated more than 500,000 francs for new buildings, equipment, etc., and four of them, probably two each English and American, will be on the permanent board. It is planned to have each year two American and two English trained nurses on the staff.

As against taking an active part in war, this Friends' work has been and is a labor of love, for the Quakers for 250 years have laid emphasis on the practical character of Christianity, and it is hoped this hospital experiment in international cooperation and good will may, even in its diminutive sphere, bear some fruit.

AMERICAN CASUALTIES.

Very respectfully,

P. C. HARRIS,
The Adjutant General.

Among the 10,709 casualties occurring among "other units" there is one most interesting and not inconsiderable group, some of the members of which are included in "troops not in division," and the rest among the casualties of replacement and depot divisions. These are the men who deserted to the front. They went A. W. O. L.—absent without leave—from their organizations in the zone of supplies or in the training areas, and found their way up to the battle line, where many of them took part in the fighting, and some of them were killed or wounded. These cases were so numerous that Gen. Pershing made special arrangements by which trained men who had rendered good service behind the lines could, as a reward, secure opportunity to go to the front and take part in the fighting.

THE DEADLIEST WAR.

Of every 100 American soldiers and sailors who took part in the war with Germany, 2 were killed or died of disease during the period of hostilities. In the Northern Army during the Civil War the number was about 10. Among the other great nations in this war, between 20 and 25 in each 100 called to the colors were killed or died. To carry the comparison still further, American losses in this war were relatively one-fifth as large as during the Civil War and less than one-tenth as large as in the ranks of the enemy or among the nations associated with us.

The war was undoubtedly the bloodiest which has ever been fought. One possible competitor might be the Crimean War, in which the casualty rate per 100 men was equally heavy. The British forces in the Crimean War lost 22 of every 100 men, the French 31, the Turkish 27, and the Russian 43. More than four-fifths of the losses were, however, deaths from disease, while in the recent war with Germany disease deaths were inconsiderable as compared with battle deaths. The forces engaged in the Crimean War were, moreover, much smaller.

In addition, 9,677 nurses were transported, a grand total, exclusive of civilian missions and persons engaged in welfare and special work, of 2,096,399. Of this number 1,047,374 were carried under the British flag, 896,449 under the American flag, 61,608 under the Italian flag, 48,691 under the French flag, and 42,277 under flags of neutral nations. Such an achievement was no less to the credit of the Allies than to the Navy and merchant marine of the United States.

The total direct war costs amount to about $186,000,000,000, and of this sum the enemy countries spent about one-third and those on the allied side about two-thirds. Germany spent more than any other nation, and was closely followed by Great Britain, whose expenditures include those of her colonies. The figure for France is $12,000,000,000 less than that for Great Britain, and our own figure is below that for France. The Austrian expenditure was almost equal to that of the United States. It is noteworthy that the United States spent about one-eighth of the entire cost of the war and something less than one-fifth of the expenditures on the allied side.

WAR EXPENDITURES.

(Estimated on prewar rates of exchange.)

UNITED STATES.

Expenditures for the war period amounted to $32,427,000,000, and of these more than $9,384,000,000, or about 29 per cent, were met out of tax receipts and other revenues than borrowed money, although payment of nearly half of the income and profits taxes for the fiscal year 1919 has not yet been made, such payment being deferred until the fiscal year 1920. In this calculation no deduction is made of expenditures for loans to the Allies, which on June 30 amounted to $9,102.000,000, or for other investments, such as ships, stock of the War Finance Corporation, bonds of the Federal Land Banks, etc.

If we assume that the expenditures of the Government on a peace basis would have been at the rate of $1,000,000,000 a year, or for the period under discussion of nearly 27 months would have equaled $2,250,000,000, then we may estimate the gross cost of the war to June 30, 1919, at $30,177,000,000 (not including loans to Allies).

The gross public debt (without any deduction for loans to the Allies or other investments) amounted on June 30, 1919, to $25,484,000,000. Of this sum only $3,634,000,000 was in the form of Treasury certificates, or floating debt. Of such certificates more than $608,000,000 matured or were redeemed on July 1, 1919, and were paid out of the net balance in the general fund on June 30, 1919. Source: Letter of Hon. Carter Glass, July 9, 1919.

GREAT BRITAIN.

During the period of August 1, 1914, to August 16, 1919, Great Britain spent a total of 10,069,851,000 pounds sterling, of which 3,002,003,000 was raised by revenue and 7,067,848,000 represented net borrowings. No attempt has been made to discriminate between war expenditures and other expenditures, the figures covering all the expenditures for the period indicated. In order to have some idea of the normal prewar expenditures of Great Britain, it might be mentioned that during the fiscal year ending March 31, 1913, the total expenditures of Great Britain were 189 million pounds, and for the following fiscal year they were 197 million pounds. Source: London Economist for August 23, 1919.

FRANCE.

From the outbreak of the war to December 31, 1918, a total of 161 billion francs were appropriated by the French Parliament, but the entire amount was not expended. Apparently the total expenditures amounted to about 142 billion francs, of which 22½ billions were raised by taxes and the remaining 119½ billions by loans, of which 52½ billions were raised by the sale of bonds, 26 billions by short-term securities, and 41 billion represented the floating indebtedness. Source: L'Économiste Européen, August 8, 1919.

ITALY.

Italy's total actual expenditures for the four fiscal years 1914–15 to 1917–18 are given in her budget as 58,955,000,000 lire. During the period 19,318,000,000 lire were raised by taxation, while Italy's debt increased from 14,500,000,000 to 93,000,000,000, or about 78,500,000,000. The increase in indebtedness in excess of the expenditures is apparently due to the fact that Italy's bonds were floated considerably below par. Italy's expenditures during the war may, therefore, be estimated at about 97,000,000,000 lire, on the basis of the par value of her war obligations and her revenue from taxation, of which about 19,000,000,000 were raised by taxation and the remaining 78,000,000,000 by loans. Source: Budget speech of Sr. Nitti, secretary of the treasury, delivered on November 26, 1918, and printed in French in the Bulletin de Statistique et de Législation Comparée, February, 1919.

BELGIUM.

Before the war the per capita wealth of Belgium was estimated at 7.247 francs, a figure exceeded only by Great Britain, France, and Switzerland among the countries of Europe. The annual revenue in 1914 was estimated at 6,000,000,000 francs, a considerable part of which was derived from foreign investments in Russia, the Far East, South America, and other parts of the world. The estimated value of personal property, including foreign investments, was 13,820,000,000 francs in 1913, of which perhaps 2,000,000,000 francs was owned by foreigners.

PRESENT FINANCIAL SITUATION.

The prewar debt, totaling 4,887,254,000 francs, has now been increased to a grand total of 19,780,054,000 francs. This amount includes 2,347,800,000 francs represented by interprovincial bonds covering German fines, and 7,800,000,000 francs for the retirement of the German currency. German indemnities stipulated by the Treaty of Versailles are, of course, relied on for the liquidation of a large part of this war debt, 2,500,000,000 francs being payable before May 1, 1921. TWO HUNDRED DAYS OF BATTLE.

(Official report from War Department.)

Two out of every three American soldiers who reached France took part in battle. The number who reached France was 2,084,000, and of these 1,390,000 saw active service in the front line.

American combat forces were organized into divisions, which consisted of some 28,000 officers and men. These were the largest on the western front, since the British division numbered about 15,000 and those of the French and Germans about 12,000 each. There were sent over seas 42 American divisions and several hundred thousand supplementary Artillery and service of supply troops.

Of the 42 divisions that reached France 29 took part in active combat service, while the others were used for replacements or were just arriving during the last month of hostilities. The battle record of the United States Army in this war is largely the history of these 29 combat divisions. Seven of them were Regular Army divisions, 11 were organized from the National Guard, and 11 were made up of National Army troops.

American combat divisions were in battle for 200 days, from the 25th of April, 1918, when the first Regular division, after long training in quiet sectors, entered an active sector on the Picardy front, until the signing of the armistice. During these 200 days they were engaged in 13 major operations, of which 11 were joint enterprises with the French, British, and Italians, and 2 were distinctively American.

At the time of their greatest activity in the second week of October all 29 American divisions were in action. They then held 101 miles of front, or 23 per cent of the entire allied battle line. From the middle of August until the end of the war they held, during the greater part of the time, a front longer than that held by the British. Their strength tipped the balance of man power in favor of the Allies, so that from the middle of June, 1918, to the end of the war the allied forces were superior in number to those of the enemy.

The total battle advances of all the American divisions amount to 782 kilometers, or 485 miles, an average advance for each division of 17 miles, nearly all of it against desperate enemy resistance. They captured 63,000 prisoners, 1,378 pieces of artillery, 708 trench mortars, and 9,650 machine guns. In June and July they helped to shatter the enemy advance toward Paris and to turn retreat into a triumphant offensive. At St. Mihiel they pinched off in a day an enemy salient which had been a constant menace to the French line for four years. In the Argonne and on the Meuse they carried lines which the enemy was determined to hold at any cost, and cut the enemy lines of communication and supply for half the western battle front.

THIRTEEN BATTLES.

American troops saw service on practically every stretch of the western front from British lines in Belgium to inactive sectors in the Vosges. On October 21, 1917, Americans entered the line in the quiet Toul sector. From that date to the armistice American units were somewhere in line almost continuously.

It is difficult to cut up the year and 22 days which intervened into well-defined battles, for in a sense the entire war on the western front was a single battle. It is possible, however, to distinguish certain major operations or phases of the greater struggle. Thirteen such operations have been recognized in which American units were engaged, of which 12 took place on the western front and 1 in Italy. Battle clasps will be awarded to the officers and men who participated in these engagements. These battles are named and the number of Americans engaged is shown below.

The first major operation in which American troops were engaged was the Cambrai battle at the end of the campaign of 1917. Scattering medical and engineering detachments, serving with the British, were present during the action, but sustained no serious casualties.

GERMAN OFFENSIVES.

The campaign of 1918 opened with the Germans in possession of the offensive. In a series of five drives of unprecedented violence the imperial great general staff sought to break the allied line and end the war. These five drives took place in five successive months, beginning in March. Each drive was so timed as to take advantage of the light of the moon for that month.

The first drive opened on March 21, on a 50-mile front across the old battle field of the Somme. In 17 days of fighting the Germans advanced their lines beyond Noyon and Montdidier and were within 12 miles of the important railroad center of Amiens, with its great stores of British supplies. In this battle, also known as the Picardy offensive, approximately 2,200 American troops, serving with the British and French, were engaged.

The attack upon Amiens had been but partially checked, when the enemy struck again to the north in the Armentieres sector, and advanced for 17 miles up the valley of the Lys. A small number of Americans, serving with the British, participated in the Lys defensive.

For their next attack (May 27) the Germans selected the French front along the Chemin des Dames north of the Aisne. The line from Rheims to a little east of Noyon was forced back. Soissons fell, and on May 31 the enemy had reached the Marne Valley, down which he was advancing in the direction of Paris. At this critical moment our Second Division, together with elements of the Third and Twenty-eighth Divisions, were thrown into the line. By blocking the German advance at Chateau-Thierry, they rendered great assistance in stopping perhaps the most dangerous of the German drives. The Second Division not only halted the enemy on its front but also recaptured from him the strong tactical positions of Bouresches, Belleau Wood, and Vaux.

The enemy had by his offensives established two salients threatening Paris. He now sought to convert them into one by a fourth terrific blow delivered on a front of 22 miles between Montdidier and Noyon. The reinforced French Army resisted firmly and the attack was halted after an initial advance of about 6 miles. Throughout this operation (June 9–15) the extreme left line of the salient was defended by our First Division. Even before the drive began the division had demonstrated the fighting qualities of our troops by capturing and holding the town of Cantigny (May 28).

There followed a month of comparative quiet, during which the enemy reassembled his forces for his fifth onslaught. On July 15 he attacked simultaneously on both sides of Rheims, the eastern corner of the salient he had created in the Aisne drive. To the east of the city he gained little. On the west he crossed the Marne, but made slight progress. His path was everywhere blocked. In this battle 85,000 American troops were engaged—the Forty-second Division to the extreme east in Champagne, and the Third and Twenty-eighth to the west, near Chateau-Thierry.

ALLIED OFFENSIVE.

The turning point of the war had come. The great German offensives had been stopped. The initiative now passed from Ludendorff to Marshal Foch, and a series of allied offensives began, destined to roll back the German armies beyond the French frontier. In this continuous allied offensive there may be distinguished six phases or major operations in which the American Expeditionary Forces took part. In four of the six operations the American troops engaged were acting in support of allied divisions and under the command of the generals of the Allies.

The moment chosen by Marshal Foch for launching the first counter-offensive was July 18, when it was clear that the German Champagne-Marne drive had spent its force. The place chosen was the uncovered west flank of the German salient from the Aisne to the Marne. The First, Second, Third, Fourth, Twenty-sixth, Twenty-eighth, Thirty-second, and Forty-second American Divisions, together with selected French troops, were employed. When the operation was completed (August 6) the salient had been flattened out and the allied line ran from Soissons to Rheims along the Vesle.

Two days later the British struck at the Somme salient, initiating an offensive which, with occasional breathing spells, lasted to the date of the armistice. American participation in this operation was intermittent. From August 8 to 20 elements of the Thirty-third Division, which had been brigaded for training with the Australians, were in the line and took part in the capture of Chipilly Ridge. Later the Twenty-seventh and Thirtieth Divisions, who served throughout with the British, were brought over from the Ypres sector and used in company with Australian troops to break the Hindenburg line at the tunnel of the St. Quentin Canal (Sept. 20–Oct. 20).

In the meantime simultaneous assaults were in progress at other points on the front. On August 18 Gen. Mangin began the Oise-Aisne phase of the great allied offensive. Starting from the Soissons-Rheims line, along which they had come to rest August 6, the French armies advanced by successive stages to the Aisne, to Laon, and on November 11 were close to the frontier. In the first stages of this advance they were assisted by the Twenty-eighth, Thirty-second, and Seventy-seventh American Divisions, but by September 15 all of these were withdrawn for the coming Meuse-Argonne offensive of the American Army.

The day after the opening of the Oise-Aisne offensive the British launched the first of a series of attacks in the Ypres sector, which continued with some interruptions to the time of the armistice and may be termed the "Ypres-Lys offensive." Four American divisions at different times participated in this operation. The Twenty-seventh and Thirtieth were engaged in the recapture of Mount Kemmel, August 31 to September 2. The Thirty-seventh and Ninety-first were withdrawn from the Meuse-Argonne battle and dispatched to Belgium, where they took part in the last stages of the Ypres-Lys offensive (Oct. 31 to Nov. 11).

With the organization of the American First Army on August 10, under the personal command of Gen. Pershing, the history of the American Expeditionary Forces entered upon a new stage. The St. Mihiel (Sept. 12–16) and Meuse-Argonne (Sept. 26–Nov. 11) offensives were major operations planned and executed by American generals and American troops.

In addition to the 12 operations above mentioned, American troops participated in the Battle of Vittorio-Veneto (Oct. 24 to Nov. 4), which ended in the rout of the Austrian Army.

THE BATTLE OF ST. MIHIEL.

The first distinctly American offensive was the reduction of the St. Mihiel salient, carried through from September 12 to September 15, largely by American troops and wholly under the orders of the American commander in chief. In the attack the American troops were aided by French colonial troops, who held a portion of the front line. The Americans were also aided by French and British air squadrons.

The attack began at 5 a. m., after four hours of artillery preparation of great severity, and met with immediate success. Before noon about half the distance between the bases of the salient had been covered, and the next morning troops of the First and Twenty-sixth Divisions met at Vigneulles, cutting off the salient within 24 hours from the beginning of the movement.

Two comparisons between this operation and the Battle of Gettysburg emphasize the magnitude of the action. About 550,000 Americans were engaged at St. Mihiel; the Union forces at Gettysburg numbered approximately 100,000. St. Mihiel set a record for concentration of artillery fire by a four-hour artillery preparation, consuming more than 1,000,000 rounds of ammunition. In three days at Gettysburg Union artillery fired 33,000 rounds.

The St. Mihiel offensive cost only about 7,000 casualties, less than one-third the Union losses at Gettysburg. There were captured 16,000 prisoners and 443 guns. A dangerous enemy salient was reduced, and American commanders and troops demonstrated their ability to plan and execute a big American operation.

THE BATTLE OF THE MEUSE-ARGONNE.

The object of the Meuse-Argonne offensive, said Gen. Pershing in his report of November 20, 1918, was "to draw the best German divisions to our front and to consume them." This sentence expresses better than any long description not only the object but also the outcome of the battle. Every available American division was thrown against the enemy. Every available German division was thrown in to meet them. At the end of 47 days of continuous battle our divisions had consumed the German divisions.

The goal of the American attack was the Sedan-Mezieres railroad, the main line of supply for the German forces on the major part of the western front. If this line were cut, a retirement on the whole front would be forced. This retirement would include, moreover, evacuation of the Briey iron fields, which the Germans had been using to great advantage to supplement their iron supply. The defense of the positions threatened was therefore of such importance as to warrant the most desperate measures for resistance. When the engagement was evidently impending, the commander of the German Fifth Army sent word to his forces calling on them for unyielding resistance and pointing out that defeat in this engagement might mean disaster for the fatherland.

On the first day, the 26th of September, and the next day or two after that, the lines were considerably advanced. Then the resistance became more stubborn. Each side threw in more and more of its man power until there were no more reserves. Many German divisions went into action twice, and not a few three times, until, through losses, they were far under strength. All through the month of October the attrition went on. Foot by foot American troops pushed back the best of the German divisions. On November 1 the last stage of the offensive began. The enemy power began to break. American troops forced their way to the east bank of the Meuse. Toward the north they made even more rapid progress and in seven days reached the outskirts of Sedan and cut the Sedan-Mezieres Railroad, making the German line untenable.

In the meantime (October 2 to 28) our Second and Thirty-sixth Divisions had been sent west to assist the French, who were advancing in Champagne beside our drive in the Argonne. The liaison detachment between the two armies was for a time furnished by the Ninety-second Division.

In some ways the Meuse-Argonne offers an interesting resemblance to the Battle of the Wilderness, fought from May 5 to 12, 1864, in the Civil War. Both were fought over a terrain covered with tangled woods and underbrush. The Wilderness was regarded as a long battle, marked by slow progress, against obstinate resistance, with very heavy casualties. Here the similarity ends. The Meuse-Argonne lasted six times as long as the Battle of the Wilderness. Twelve times as many American troops were engaged as were on the Union side. They used in the action ten times as many guns and fired about one hundred times as many rounds of artillery ammunition. The actual weight of the ammunition fired was greater than that used by the Union forces during the entire Civil War. Casualties were perhaps four times as heavy as among the Northern troops in the Battle of the Wilderness.

The Battle of the Meuse-Argonne was beyond compare the greatest ever fought by American troops, and there have been few, if any, greater battles in the history of the world.

RECORD OF 29 COMBAT DIVISIONS.

Twenty-nine combat divisions achieved the successes and bore the losses of active operations. The story of their achievements can not be told within the limits of this account. There are, however, certain fundamental records which give us a picture of the accomplishments of these divisions. They tell us how long each division served in the front line, how far each advanced against the enemy, how many prisoners each captured, and how heavily each suffered.

The First Division was the first in line and the first to enter an active sector. It reached France in June, 1917, went into line in October, and into an active sector in April, 1918. The next three divisions in order of length of service all reached France in 1917.

Three of the 29 divisions were still serving their apprenticeship and had not seen much severe battle service at the time of the signing of the armistice. They were the Sixth, the Eighty-first, and the Eighty-eighth. It is interesting that of the total of 2,232 days which American divisions spent in line four-tenths were in active sectors.

The Railroad Bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CLEMENT C. DICKINSON,

OF MISSOURI,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, November 15, 1919.

Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I have feared that this great transportation measure, so vital to the interest of every citizen of the United States, would be driven through the House under pressure, without full and fair consideration, and without sufficiently safeguarding the interest of the general public. This is the most important legislative bill that will engage the attention of this Congress. The transportation question, dealing with the commerce of the Nation, should have the best and most careful thought of Congress; and is entitled to the full and fairest consideration, and I deplore the fact that this important bill should be taken up now and rushed through in the closing hours of this special session.

I fear that whatever bill should be hastily passed by this House will not be the measure that will finally become the law, and the House should not abandon its duty and right to pass such a railroad bill as would meet the judgment and best interests of all the people, and by hasty action here is surrendering in a large measure to the Senate the enactment of this legislation on this all-important subject, with a bare hope that finally in conference a better measure may be framed and finally enacted into law.

I am aware that the great Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee has given constant attention and consideration for many weeks to the provisions of this bill, but little opportunity has been given the large membership of the House to study in detail this bill, reported just before it was taken up for action and passage. Without any desire to criticize the membership of the committee that has labored so long and so industriously in their desire to report a proper bill, I feel that it should have been reported at an earlier date, or the passage of it delayed until the regular session in December, so that the Members that are not on the committee and the general public could have had opportunity to more carefully study this large bill with 86 pages dealing with a subject of such vital interest to the country. This bill in its present shape does not seem to me sufficiently to safeguard the public, who should be the first concern of Congress.

While capital or the owners of the railroads should be fairly treated in dealing with these properties, yet it must not be forgotten that their rights as owners are subject to the rights of the general public. That, in fact, they hold these properties as trustees for the public as well as owners. They have no right to retain ownership if they fail to protect the public welfare. Unless this bill sufficiently protects the interests of the public, it should not become a law until it has been amended in every proper particular, or rewritten if necessary. These railroads are common carriers, built not for the purpose of mere investment but for the commerce of the country that furnishes the traffic that supports the railroads. No railroad measure should be passed that fails to have proper regard for not only the public but also for those that give life and vitality to railroad operation—the employees, who are necessary and without which no railroad can run. Both capital and labor should be fairly treated, but the shippers, producers, and consumers are the ones that need protection against encroachments upon their rights. Without their contribution the railroads could not run, for the railroads must depend upon the public for support. Safeguard the rights of the public and capital and labor will both be helped thereby.

I will not in this brief time attempt to point out all of the objectionable features to the bill.

It is submitted amid the controversies between capital and labor. Capital seeking to pass a bill that will safeguard its interest, to stabilize railroad stocks and bonds and enhance their value, and provide that the Government guarantee returns demanded on the investment and operation of these properties. Labor is demanding higher wages, and capital is protesting unless the public will stand the increases by higher freight rates. The demand of the public heretofore has been lower freight rates and more business. The products of the farm and factories and mines can not reach the consuming public at fair prices unless reasonable rates are provided. Capital refuses to surrender any part of its income in order that labor may have its demands met. Labor asks that a larger share for the results of their labor be given them. The fear is that this bill opens the way to grind the public that furnishes and pays the freight and is entitled to fair and reasonable rates, while capital and labor struggles threaten to unload on the public unusual burdens. If the Government by legislation assumes too many burdens under this legislation, a grievous wrong will have been done. Regardless of my views as to public ownership of railroads, this question will not end unless strict control is provided by law, so as to compel protection of the general public. It is better to retain control, at least for a period, and enact proper legislation, than to hastily turn over the railroads. Spurred by those who seek undue advantages, while seeking to get rid of Government control, action on this bill is hastened.

In the stress of war the railroads fell down under private ownership and control, and the owners were more than willing to let the Government take over these properties during the war, when extraordinary demands had to be met, and they were anxious for the Government to contribute and spend large sums of money for the betterment and operation of these properties that they could not successfully handle under war demands. Engrossed as the Government was in the stress of haste and the enormous strain, while it used all its powers to help bring the war to a successful end, it was compelled to use the same officers and agents who had operated these railroads under private ownership, and at no time has the Government been in real and full control of the operation of these properties. Many of the very agents employed by the Government from the inception apparently aided in the propaganda to discredit Government control, seeking thereby, apparently, to hasten the return of railroads to private owners. There has been no fair test of Government control.

The conduct of the railroad owners and operators in the past toward the great public service corporations has left a bad impression in the public mind toward private control, and the robbing in many instances of these properties by diverting its revenue, providing immense salaries, making unnecessary overhead charges, increasing burdens of operation, all have tended to help the advocates of public ownership of these and all public service corporations, who urge that it is far better that the Government own the railroads rather than have the railroads own the Government; but, above all things, the Government should regulate and not lose its fair control of the railroads, and the railroads should not be permitted to control the Government in any line. Let the railroads serve the public and let the public interest be protected, and all may be well, else Government ownership will come to the front again with renewed force and with the support of many who have heretofore not been in favor of Government ownership.

This bill in its present shape invites the opposition of many who think intensely along the lines of safeguarding the public interest. Under this bill the Government is asked to continue to furnish large sums of money for the benefit of private owners; guaranties and loans are liberally provided for; short lines and so-called weak lines discriminated against; water transportation discriminated against; extraordinary and unusual powers given to the Interstate Commerce Commission in regard to abandonment of short-line railroads, and in other respects. I have sought to protect the interests of the public and my section by amendments offered and by speech, and I do not feel that I can support this measure in its present shape and therefore will cast my vote against it.

Exclusion of Victor L. Berger.

OF

HON. RICHARD YATES,

OF ILLINOIS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, November 10, 1919.

On the following resolution:

"Resolved, That under the facts and circumstances of this case Victor L. Berger is not entitled to take the oath of office as a Representative in this House from the fifth congressional district of the State of Wisconsin or to hold a seat therein as such Representative."

Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, Victor Berger has spoken. We, after reading every word of the testimony and the committee report, have heard him, and we have seen him and felt him and his attitude and spirit. Although he is not a Member of this House, we extended to him the privilege of presenting what he might have to say as to why this resolution should not be passed. I am glad we voted to do that, and I am glad that we voted down the motion made at the close of his "argument" by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] to expunge the same, because I think it is important that the Berger speech go to the country to be read and reread and pondered and weighed by all the people. For myself, when I am asked why I voted to exclude this man, I shall need no other explanation or justification than to say "Go and read in the RECORD of this House the things he put there, the things he read and said in the presence of 300 Members of the House." His remarks amounted to a harangue and tirade. He talked for nearly two hours. He lifted the veil and disclosed his soul. He rolled up a curtain, and we looked upon his heart. In that heart we saw nothing but hatred. He did not conceal this hate. It reminded us of the celebrated German hymn of hate sung by Huns as they invaded Belgium and France. He venomously gave vent to his hate.

He hates Congress. He denounced us Representatives and told us we did not truly represent the people; he denounced us again, saying we are all cowed by the capitalistic press. This is a deliberate falsehood, so far as I am concerned and so far as all the other Members of this House are concerned, I believe. He hates the courts. He hates the judge and jury by whom he was tried and convicted and sentenced to 20 years' imprisonment for giving aid and comfort to Germany. He hates and belittles and vilifies the President and the Secretary of War and the "superczaristic" Postmaster General and all in authority. He hates the press, declaring it plutocratic. He hates the American economic and financial system, stigmatizing it as "capitalistic." He declares and proclaims all this concentrated hatred. He is contemptuous about it. He is insolent, arrogant, insulting, vituperative, with all the expertness in editorial epithet which years of practice has given him. His effrontery is amazing. He declares he retracts nothing ever written or said by him. He admits he subscribed to the Socialist platform advocating that citizens buy guns and keep the guns, with the necessary ammunition, insisting, however, that in his own case the rifle he kept was "only to shoot deer." The gullibility with which his own dupes have swallowed his advice caused him to believe that Congress is sufficiently gullible to believe that a million men were advised to buy guns, "with necessary ammunition," to "shoot deer." He says 4,000,000 soldier and sailor boys fought all in vain, so that we "lost our liberties and gained nothing but imperialism." As a matter of fact, our boys saved New York, Washington, and Chicago from a triumphal parade led by the Kaiser; but this man says all they did was to lose us our liberties. He forgets there are graves—American—in France to-day, because such men as he helped to prolong the war. He said Congressmen, not being "representative," may exclude him, but he will return again and again. Born in the same year I was born, 1860, he had every opportunity to become a good American. He was born in Austria; he came here of his own choice in 1878. He was 18 years old; he had his eyes open. He came to better his condition. Yet in 38 years he has failed to acquire even our tongue; at least he has retained his beloved Austrian accent, so that an American can hardly understand his every other word. Three hundred of us, desiring to be fair judges, desiring to give him the benefit of the doubt, have become satisfied he is guilty of giving aid and comfort to Germany. I wish every citizen could have heard him. I hope he sends his abusive speech to a million men. He is a hater of our American system and Government; he is a traitor in speech and heart and soul. And once he himself took the oath to support the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign or domestic. He impresses me not as a mere man; he is a menace; he represents and embodies and personifies an awful thing, whose jaws and claws I have helped to keep out of the finest legislative body in the world. I thank God I have had the opportunity to render that much service to my beloved country. I could do no less under my oath, which reads as follows:

I do solemnly swear that I will support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic; that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the same; that I take this obligation freely, without any mental reservation or purpose of evasion; and that I will well and faithfully discharge the duties of the office upon which I am about to enter. So help me God.

Our Diplomatic Service; How Can Its Decay Be Arrested?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN JACOB ROGERS,

OF MASSACHUSETTS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, November 19, 1919.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted me to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I am printing an explanation of H. R. 10587, "A bill for the reorganization and improvement of the foreign service of the United States," which I introduced in the House on November 15, and upon which I hope to be given hearings before the Committee on Foreign Affairs when Congress reassembles in December.

With the termination of the World War the United States is confronted with the immediate and urgent problem of how to modify and improve its diplomatic and consular service. As never before the United States is to be a great world power. Questions of international prestige and policy, as well as of the expansion of our trade, demand the most efficient possible representation of our country in foreign nations. Our present foreign service is modeled substantially as it was several decades ago, at a time when the problems confronting us were entirely different from those of to-day. Our foreign service must grow if we are to grow and to realize our world opportunities.

But not only our methods but our men must be representative of the new day. On the whole, and speaking very broadly, I believe that our consular service has been improving during recent years—improving not merely in the way in which it has performed the country's business but also in the character and ability of the men whom we have sent forth as consuls. Speaking equally broadly, I think that our diplomatic service has been going downhill. This latter tendency has in part resulted from the kind of men who have been serving as our secretaries of embassy and legation abroad. While it is true that these secretaries are subordinate to the ambassadors or ministers at the foreign capitals where they are serving, nevertheless in fields involving diplomatic technique and experience, as well as in fields involving actual national policies and programs, the secretaries to a very large extent—because they are the permanent and nonpolitical officers of the embassy or legations—determine the excellence of the service at a given moment.

Why is it almost inevitable that our corps of secretaries is at present not up to the standard? For two reasons: First, because the salary is pitifully inadequate to attract and hold men of the first rank and ability, and, second, because the maximum probable promotion, after years of successful service, is by no means commensurate with the ambition of a first-rate man.

After 15 years of supremely successful service a man may hope to become a secretary of the first class. This means a salary of $3,000, beyond which he can not hope to go, even if he spends the remainder of his life in the service.

Business concerns have been quick to recognize this situation and are picking off our best secretaries by offering a salary inducement of three or four times what the Government is paying them. The greatest number of our secretaries to-day are in class 3, receiving $2,000 a year. Among them are several men who are efficiently discharging the duties of chiefs of bureaus in the Department of State. I refer to men like Mr. Ruddock, Chief of the very important Division of Western European Affairs, and Mr. Johnson, Chief of the Division of Latin-American Affairs. Two thousand dollars does not begin to represent a fair return for the extremely responsible work which men like these two must perform. Many of them have stayed on in the service during the war for patriotic reasons. Since the war many have already resigned and more will resign in the near future. If the Government is to compete with private business, it must offer its men at least a reasonable basis of compensation. This it has not done.

The result of the low salary scale and of the dark outlook for really worth-while promotion has been that the type of men recently applying for positions as secretaries, and able to meet the very exacting demands for appointment, has been insufficient in number and inadequate in caliber. This condition, I believe, will be increasingly evident in the future. The men who are now willing to accept appointment are as a rule those of large private means and without practical experience of any kind in business or affairs. They are men to whom the social opportunities strongly appeal, and who are little concerned with the great international problems with which a secretary should naturally be most vitally concerned. A situation more undesirable than the present one—or more unfair to the good men now in the service—can scarcely be imagined.

In a bill introduced in the early days of the present Congress—H. R. 2709—I formulated a proposal designed to result in the appointment by promotion of the best consuls general and secretaries in the service to the rank of minister as vacancies therein arose. This action would encourage a man of ambition, would provide an outlet at the top for the best men now in the service, and would stimulate the recruiting of the abler sort of young men who now hesitate to enter what looks like an absolutely blind alley.

In a bill which I introduced on the 15th instant (H. R. 10587) "for the reorganization and improvement of the foreign service of the United States," I propose a further step. One phase of the proposal means a more adequate salary scale for the secretaries—from $3,500 for the fourth-class secretary to $5,500 for the first-class secretary, as compared with a present scale of $1,500 up to $3,000.

But the fundamentals of my plan go much further. The Diplomatic Service and the Consular Service are now completely divorced and independent. There is no interchange or intermingling between them. I propose a complete fusion and unification of the two services, with promotions from the lowest to the highest grades. I do this by abolishing altogether, as a service rank, the secretaries of embassy or legation. I would give each secretary now in the service a service rank as consul general or consul, each receiving a consular grade and salary depending upon the secretarial class in which he now is. All new men entering the service hereafter would receive an appropriate service rank in one of the lower consular grades. The resulting unified service I would call the "Foreign Service of the United States."

If this plan is adopted, then every man in the foreign service will have a consular rank. Those best fitted for diplomatic service at embassies or legations will be assigned, though consuls, for such service. While on such service they will be known in the country and community where they are located as counselor or secretary of embassy or legation, just as at present. There will be no handicap to their performing their diplomatic functions resulting from the fact that they hold commissions still as consular officers. As the needs of the service or of the individual make proper, a man performing the duties of secretary will be transferred back to consular work, and vice versa. I believe that this program, involving frequent interweaving between diplomatic and consular work, and the attendant experience gained, will tend greatly to broaden and stimulate the men of the service. Graduates of a law school will gain in breadth and usefulness by acquiring business experience in a consular office at some great world port. On the other hand, a good business man, whose experience hitherto has been wholly on the consular side, will acquire additional and extremely useful information and experience if he is assigned from time to time to perform diplomatic work at a foreign capital. All in all, the shuttling back and forth will prepare the right man for the most important duties in the higher branches of our foreign service. The proposal will strengthen each side of our present foreign service where at present it is weakest. Public opinion, and especially enlightened business opinion, demands practical experience of all our representatives abroad. My program will insure the accomplishment of this. Recruiting of the right men will be encouraged, because the prospects of promotion for merit, higher salaries, and more abundant, vital, and varied work will necessarily attract much stronger men.

As a corollary to this plan I propose that transfer back and forth to diplomatic and consular work may be made by the Department of State without the concurrence of the Senate, so long as the individual affected is retained in the same grade of the service. Only when he is promoted to the next higher grade and consequent salary would the advice and consent of the Senate be requisite. I also propose that every man in the service, including clerks and subordinates, should be an American citizen, except only those who receive salaries of less than $1,000 per year. I also suggest that all clerical and subordinate positions should be subject to civil-service laws and regulations. This is to encourage the infusion of the merit system in the service from the top to the bottom.

I have left undiscussed one vital element of the plan. By section 11 of the bill I propose that the Secretary of State be directed to designate from time to time, and after special preliminary examination, foreign-service pupils, who shall be between 18 and 30 years of age, who shall be required to attend such university as the Secretary may prescribe for at least three years, and who shall during that time follow such courses of instruction as he may stipulate. When these foreign-service pupils have completed their course and have successfully passed an examination to determine their fitness, the Secretary may recommend them for appointment as vice consuls of career in the foreign service. I propose that such foreign-service pupils shall be under no expense for subsistence or tuition during their course, and that they shall agree to remain in the service for at least five years following their appointment. If this recommendation is adopted, it will mean that after the plan gets under way newcomers in the service—necessary young and energetic men—shall be possessed of all the theoretical and technical knowledge requisite for the proper performance of their important, difficult, and varied duties. Such a plan can not absolutely guarantee success in every case. But it certainly minimizes the likelihood of an inadequate personnel. In other words, the proposal extends to the foreign service the practice of the Nation in training at West Point or Annapolis its future officers of the Army and Navy. France has long followed this method with excellent results.

If the two measures which I have outlined receive the approval of the country and of Congress, in substance if not in detail, I am satisfied that we shall have laid the foundation of a thoroughly progressive, modern, and businesslike foreign service. We shall go far to eliminate from the diplomatic side the idle rich young man who thinks in terms of silk hats, spats, and afternoon teas. In strengthening the Diplomatic Service we shall also be strengthening the Consular Service. We shall be paving the way for a virile and vigorous foreign service—one capable of truly representing the United States in its relations with the rest of the world in the great days of trade and politics which lie before the Nation.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. FRANK W. MONDELL,

OF WYOMING,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, November 19, 1919.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the special session of the Sixty-sixth Congress draws to a close. The work for which it was especially convened—that of passing the seven great appropriation bills, which its Democratic predecessor had failed to pass—was performed in record time, in excellent form, and with enormous saving to the Public Treasury.

The House of Representatives has, with the passage of the Esch railroad bill, completed in excellent form the extensive program of progressive and constructive legislation outlined in the resolution adopted at a conference of the Republican Members of the House at the beginning of the session.

The duties of the session have been onerous and exacting, and the conditions under which they have been performed have been difficult and trying. The Congress was called upon to place upon the statute books in 38 legislative days 7 great supply bills a Democratic Congress had failed to enact in the more than three months of the preceding session. The unsettled conditions following the war have rendered it difficult to plan and build along sane lines and on sound foundations the constructive legislation to which the Congress was pledged.

Notwithstanding these handicaps, whether we view the work of this special session from the standpoint of economy in appropriations, forward-looking, constructive legislation or diligent continuous attention to the public business, it can be truthfully said that no Congress in American history has more courageously, consistently, and continuously addressed itself to or more faithfully performed and discharged the duties and responsibilities placed upon it than the special session of the Sixty-sixth Congress now drawing to a close.

Certain Democrats have claimed that it was a Republican filibuster that prevented the passage of seven of the great supply bills in the closing days of the last Congress. I have never been particularly disturbed by that effort of the majority of the Sixty-fifth Congress to charge its failures to the minority, as it simply serves to emphasize the fact that if it were a Republican filibuster that defeated those bills it saved the American people about $940,000,000 as compared with the Democratic bills that failed and $1,685,000,000 as compared with the sums of the estimates for those bills as submitted by the Democratic administration.

For the benefit of those who desire a detailed statement of the actual savings in the appropriations made by this session of Congress as compared with the bills which failed at the closing session of the last Congress, and amounting to $939,692,541.97, I am inserting in the RECORD a detailed statement relative to these measures, which is as follows:

[1] Amount as reported to the Senate.
[2] Amount as passed the Senate.
[3] Amount as passed the House.
[4] Amount as reported to the Senate exclusive of $750,000,000 for railroad deficiency, passed as a separate measure but included in third deficiency act for the third session of the Sixty-fifth Congress as reported to the Senate. Also exclusive of $53,750,000 for emergency shipping fund carried in the amount of the sundry civil bill for the Sixty-fifth Congress, third session, as it passed the House.
[5] This amount does not include $45,044,500 carried in the bill making urgent deficiency appropriations for the Bureau of War Risk Insurance and for the payment of pensions. Of this sum $42,615,000 was not estimated or considered at the third session of the Sixty-fifth Congress, and $2,429,500 was included in the third deficiency bill at that session.

It will be noted that these savings are in the main in the Army, the Navy, and the sundry civil bill. In other words, in lines and items of expenditure for the establishments and purposes directly or indirectly connected with and affected by war operations. It has been the habit of our Democratic friends to claim that these enormous reductions and savings were due to the ending of the war and to the tremendous reduction of military activities. This claim is utterly without basis or foundation.

The estimates considered by the committees of the Sixty-fifth Congress in December, 1918, January, February, and March, 1919, were estimates made after the close of hostilities and the signing of the armistice, and were substantially the estimates that were considered by the Committee on Appropriations of the House in May. The savings on the bills above referred to, in round figures, were as follows:

Army appropriation bill	$468,175,189.48
Navy appropriation bill	208,611,283.00
Sundry civil appropriation bill	246,011,651.30

Not only were there no substantial reductions in the estimates considered by the Republicans in May below those considered by the Democrats in January, February, and March, and no suggestions on the part of the administration that they could get along with lesser sums, but during the consideration of these bills by the House and Senate in May and June, and up to the last moment before final action on them, the officials of the administration were strenuously endeavoring to secure increases in practically the amount of the reductions made by the Republican Congress.

For the benefit of those who desire detailed information as to the saving in the appropriations as actually made, as compared with the estimates of the sums needed as submitted by the administration, I am inserting in the RECORD a detailed statement showing an actual saving in appropriations as compared with the estimates of $1,685,867,893.64, and which is as follows:

Comparison of the amounts of the appropriation bills as agreed upon, with amounts asked for and considered during the Sixty-sixth Congress, first session.

Title of act.	Amounts as agreed upon, Sixty-sixth Congress, first session.	Amounts asked for and considered, Sixty-sixth Congress, first session	Decrease of amounts agreed upon, Sixty-sixth Congress, first session, under amounts asked for and considered, Sixty-sixth Congress, first session

Indian	11,131,397.03	11,939,813.89	808,416.86
Navy	616,096,838.88	975,903,621.28	359,806,782.40
Sundry civil	605,160,207.95	964,591,556.25	359,431,348.30
Railroad deficiency	750,000,000.00	1,200,000,000.00	450,000,000.00
Third deficiency	24,305,929.40	[1] 42,764,678.94	18,458,749.54
War-risk insurance and pension deficiency	45,044,500.00	45,044,500.00
Expenses incident to first session of the Sixty-sixth Congress	385,720.00	385,720.00
Total	2,873,713,652.76	4,553,581,546.40	1,685,867,893.64

[1] This amount does not include $45,044,500, estimated in connection with the bill making urgent deficiency appropriations for the Bureau of War Risk Insurance and for the payment of pensions. Of this sum, $42,615,000 was not estimated at the third session of the Sixty-fifth Congress, and therefore not included in the total of $42,764,678.94, which sum does include $2,429,500 for above-named purposes.

Let me again emphasize the fact that these estimates were not predicated on war conditions; they were submitted after the signing of the armistice; and that, therefore, the saving which was made below these estimates was not, as gentlemen on the Democratic side have claimed, a saving made possible by changed conditions. Neither the conditions nor the estimates had appreciably changed between January, February, and March, when the Democratic Congress considered the bills, and May and June, when the Republican Congress considered them.

Neither were these savings due to a failure to provide for the reasonable needs of the Government in its essential activities. Nearly five months have passed since these appropriations became available, and no necessary activity of the Government has been unduly or injuriously curtailed. No substantial or well-founded claim has been made that the appropriations will not be sufficient for the period for which they were made. All this being true, the fact is that the special session has saved to the American people approximately $940,000,000 below the appropriations actually proposed by its predecessor and more than one and three-quarter billions below the estimates on which the appropriation bills were based.

THE PROGRAM OF LEGISLATION.

The passage of the Esch railroad bill completes the program of constructive legislation proposed for this session, which includes among the important work accomplished by legislative enactment:

MEASURES THAT HAVE BEEN CONSIDERED BY AND PASSED THE HOUSE.

In addition to the measures that have become laws, the House of Representatives has considered and passed measures of great importance, which the Senate, engrossed with the treaty, has not had time to consider, of which the following are among the more important:

The Esch railroad bill: A complete and comprehensive measure for the return of the railroads to their owners and for effective and extended public control over the same. One of the most important pieces of constructive legislation ever considered by Congress.

The Greene merchant marine act, for the promotion and maintenance of the American merchant marine: A comprehensive legislative enactment outlining a policy with regard to the disposition, regulation, and use of Government-built ships and for the promotion of an extensive American merchant marine.

The Good budget bill, providing a comprehensive plan for a complete and thorough budget system for the Government of the United States.

The Smoot-Sinnott oil, gas, and coal-land leasing law: A complete plan for the leasing of the remaining public lands containing coal, oil, or gas. The first strictly leasing bill which has passed the Congress. This bill has passed both Houses and is now in conference.

The water-power bill: A carefully prepared and thoroughly considered legislative program for the development of water power under Federal regulation.

Bills reported from the Committee on Ways and Means, as follows:

Repealing the obnoxious taxes on soft drinks, soda water, and ice cream.

To regulate the importation and promote the establishment of industries for the manufacture of dyes and other coal-tar products.

Providing adequate tariff on essential ores, the importance of which was emphasized by the war, including tungsten, zinc, and magnesite.

Providing tariff rates necessary under existing conditions for the production of glassware, surgical instruments, and shell and pearl buttons.

Repeal of law providing for Canadian reciprocity.

The Fess bill, providing for Federal aid to and cooperation with the States in the vocational training and rehabilitation of those injured in industry, including agriculture and transportation. An important and noteworthy legislative proposal in the interest of humanity and for the restoration of unfortunates to lives of hope and usefulness.

The Edge bill, an extension of the Federal reserve act, providing for organization for the promotion of foreign trade. A most important piece of constructive legislation, particularly essential in the development of our trade with South America and in the extension of our commerce with all the world. This bill has passed both House and Senate and has been agreed to in conference.

The Sweet bill, amending the war-risk insurance act, with the view of increasing the efficiency of the bureau and greatly liberalizing the provisions of the act in the payment of compensation to disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines.

The Johnson bill, for the deportation of undesirable aliens.

The Rowe seaman's bill, to encourage American citizens to enter the merchant marine by reducing the length of the sea service necessary for American citizens taking a course on United States training ships to become able seamen.

The Alexander load-line bill, to aid American shipping by the establishment of load lines for certain vessels.

The Kiess bill, revising the laws relating to public printing and binding and the distribution of Government publications, with a view of clarifying, simplifying, and systematizing the same, and effecting a saving of over half a million dollars per annum.

The Rogers bill, authorizing the Secretary of War to loan rifles to posts of the American Legion.

The Kahn bill, to encourage the efficiency of the Military Establishment by a modification of the requirements for the selection of certain noncommissioned officers.

The Scott bill, to protect the coastwise trade by repealing the provision of law which allowed foreign ships to participate in the coastwise trade during the war.

The Hutchinson cold-storage bill, providing a comprehensive plan for the regulation of cold storage with the view of preventing hoarding and deterioration of foodstuffs in cold storage, and the practice of deception with respect to the same.

The Nolan minimum-wage bill.

The Platt bill, amending the Federal farm-loan act with a view of removing red tape and making the act more workable.

A resolution requesting the Secretary of War to place on sale without delay the surplus food products under control of the War Department, the passage of which has had a marked effect on the cost of living by placing many millions of dollars' worth of food in the hands of the people at reasonable prices.

A resolution requesting the Secretary of War to immediately distribute among the highway departments of the several States for use on roads the more than 22,000 motor vehicles for which requisition has been made, and to immediately offer for sale at public auction all other surplus Army motor vehicles.

A bill for the retirement of public-school teachers in the District of Columbia.

IMPORTANT MEASURES REPORTED TO THE HOUSE.

In addition to the important measures which have become laws and the even more important measures that have been passed by the House, the House committees have reported much legislation of importance which has not been considered owing to the lack of time and which will be considered early in the regular session. Among the more important of these measures are the following:

The Fuller bill, providing for increase of Civil War pensions.

The Sells bill, providing for increase in Spanish War pensions.

The Mondell national soldier settlement bill.

The Lehlbach civil-service retirement bill.

The Johnson bill, further regulating and controlling the immigration of aliens.

The Vestal wheat and corn-mill products standards bill.

The Bland monthly pension-payment bill.

Several committees of the House, both regular and special, have been giving careful and painstaking attention to the matter of investigating war expenditures. This is particularly true of the Special Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, Mr. GRAHAM'S committee, and the Walsh committee on Expenditures under the Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation. Other than the reports on Army foodstuffs and on motor vehicles above referred to and statements to the House on the situation surrounding the $70,000,000 plant at Nitro, W. Va., and some other details of the work of the committees, the committees have not gotten far enough along with their work to make reports to the House, but the reports already made have served a most valuable and useful purpose in the public interest, and the committees are, through their diligent investigations, accumulating a fund of information which will be presented in due time and be of great interest and value.

The above brief reference to and outline of the more important legislation which has become law, which has been passed by the House of Representatives, or which has been reported by the committees, while it fails to present the work of the session in that detail to which it is entitled, is sufficient to challenge the attention of even the casual reader to the great volume and vast importance of the work of this session. The work has been performed in a thorough and workmanlike manner, and its volume and importance is such as to challenge the admiration of the country and reflect credit upon the Congress.

The Railroad Bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN C. BOX,

OF TEXAS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, November 17, 1919,

On the bill (H. R. 10453) to provide for the termination of Federal control of railroads and systems of transportation; to provide for the settlement of disputes between carriers and their employees; to further amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended, and for other purposes.

Mr. BOX. Mr. Speaker, the President decided and definitely announced several months ago that, with or without any action by Congress, he will return the railroads to their owners by January 1, 1920, so that they will be returned whether or not this bill is passed.

The passage of a well-considered law, fair to the people and all concerned, would help, but Congress is not bound to enact a bad law in order to return the roads to the companies. It will be better to enact no law than to pass a bad one. The roads will go back in any event.

In passing I feel compelled to say that I am opposed to the Plumb plan for the Government ownership or operation of railways. Such a scheme necessarily involves ultimately the complete taking over by the Nation of coal mines, iron and steel and timber industries, and later, but certainly, the socialization of mills, gins, stores, farms, and other agencies of producing and distributing what men need.

Among the many provisions contained in the 86 pages of this bill, a few of which are good and many bad, are the following:

It extends the time for the payment of what the companies will owe the Government on unsettled balances at the end of the period of Government control for a period of 10 years.

Its provisions are such as to induce and virtually force an early increase in freight and passenger charges.

It provides that large sums of money belonging to the Government shall be used by the railway companies for present "operating expenses."

It requires the Government to furnish the roads, in addition to the funds last above mentioned, a fund of $250,000,000 as a revolving loan fund for the exclusive use of railway companies, and further requires them to take steps to raise freight and passenger charges in order to get the benefit of this loan fund.

It guarantees the "standard income" of the railways for a period of six months after they are returned to the owners. The "standard income" is the average return received by the railroads during the three years just preceding our entry into the war—the best three-year period for them in their history. This guaranty will insure the income of the roads for a period of between 18 and 24 months after the actual cessation of hostilities. The terms of this guaranty are much more favorable to the roads and harder on the taxpayers than the terms of the Government guaranties during the period of war control.

All of the above things, such as the increase of the burden on the taxpayers, and freight and passenger charges, will tend to increase the cost of living at a time when it is already distressingly high.

The amount which this will cost the Government, in guaranties and subsidies, will run into the hundreds of millions, which, in addition to the sums loaned to the roads, will be taken from the Public Treasury at a time when the Government is already paying out from one to four billion dollars more per year than it is receiving in taxes and revenue, and will greatly increase the already heavy deficits.

No surprise need be felt if the railroads ask and receive still further subsidies at the end of the period covered by this guaranty.

The bill will, if enacted, unnecessarily impair to the point of destruction the regulatory powers and agencies of the State, thereby dangerously and hurtfully centralizing power at Washington, and placing it and its remedial agencies far from the people. Under it the expense, difficulty, and delay of obtaining redress will be so great that a man or concern of small means can not afford the expense of proceeding for relief.

It is subject to other serious objections, which I can not enumerate in the time allowed for these remarks.

After having voted for every amendment which will improve the measure, I shall vote against the bill, because to my own satisfaction I know it to be fundamentally wrong.

The Railroad Bill, While Not Perfect, Is a Substantial Stride in the Right Direction.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. J. WILL TAYLOR,

OF TENNESSEE,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, November 17, 1919,

On the bill (H. R. 10453) to provide for the termination of Federal control of railroads and systems of transportation; to provide for the settlement of disputes between carriers and their employees; to further amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended, and for other purposes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, this, perhaps, is the most vital and important legislation that has challenged or that may challenge the consideration of the Sixty-sixth Congress. During the last 12 months the return of the railroads to their owners has been the general topic of discussion by practically every man, woman, and child throughout the Nation. It has afforded a theme for the budding school orator in the debating society, has been the paramount question to be daily discussed and as often settled by the ubiquitous "gang" that universally gathers at the country store; the press has reveled in it, the politician has, of course, worked it overtime, and the demagogue has "rolled it as a sweet morsel" under his nefarious tongue. In other words, the railroad problem has for the past year been the all-absorbing, all-consuming topic of the hour. Almost as many theories and panaceas touching the solution of this great national subject has been advanced and propagated as there are inhabitants in the United States.

GOVERNMENT OWNERSHIP ABANDONED.

In the meantime the fallacies and sophistries of Government ownership have been exploded, and "now none are so poor as will do this sad socialistic heresy reverence." Government ownership of railroads was born out of the travail and exigencies of the war, and was justified and can only be justified as a strict emergency measure. Notwithstanding greatly increased freight and passenger tariffs, this idealistic experiment, this irridescent dream, has cost the Government of the United States—the American people, if you please—approximately a billion dollars, to say nothing of the inconvenience and unsatisfactory service suffered by the commercial and traveling public. Even the President, who was originally its chief exponent, has admitted that Government ownership of railroads and telephone and telegraph lines are impracticable, and some time ago returned the wires to private ownership and has given formal notice that he will return the roads on January 1.

PURPOSES OF THE BILL.

The intents and purposes of this bill, therefore, are to provide a method of return and to prescribe rules of conduct which shall follow.

Of course, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the bill under consideration is not perfect and will not be received by unanimous acclaim. However, in my opinion, it is a wholesome and substantial stride in the right direction, and will be beneficial to a greater or less degree to all classes of our citizenship. It would be next to a physical impossibility, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, to evolve a measure that would absolutely please, gratify, and satisfy every person and every interest. The millennium has not yet dawned and the docile lamb is still just a little bit "leery" and suspicious of the ravenous lion. Human nature, in other words, is still unbridled and more or less rampant. We can only perform our candid, conscientious, and patriotic duty in such matters, keeping in mind the welfare of our country; and if there be those that are so blinded by selfishness and prejudice that they can not reconcile themselves to the results of honest efforts on the part of their representatives that is, of course, their misfortune. It is a lamentable fact that we have people in this country, claiming to be American citizens, too, whose moral perspicuity is so dwarfed and circumscribed that they can see no good in anything that does not reflect their own ideas, their own image, and their own interest. These chronic and perpetual critics, discontents, and calamity howlers are not confined to any particular class or condition, however. They are to be found among the "idle rich" as well as with the "unfortunate poor."

RAILROADS HAVE WROUGHT WONDERS.

The railroads have been a tremendous influence and agency in the development of our country. Within the limited observation of each and every Member of this House, under the magical touch of railway development "desert and waste places of the earth have been made to blossom as the rose." In the wake of railroads cities spring up, markets are created, factories are installed, the wheels and spindles of industry revolve, labor finds employment, and education and prosperity inevitably follow. These great arteries of trade and commerce have not only begotten industrial evolution and prosperity, but they have made communication easy and travel cheap, practicable, and comfortable. We can not therefore afford to adopt a narrow or niggard policy which might tend to discourage, hamper, or retard further railroad development in our country. Albeit, we must not permit the great financial interests back of the railroads to impose burdensome conditions on the public or to dominate our governmental policies. I cheerfully and gratefully acknowledge the immense benefits which have inured to our country through railroad development; however, the railroads have not thereby acquired rights, privileges, or prerogatives superior to any other person or organization engaged in legitimate trade. I believe the railroads should be permitted to derive a just and reasonable return on the investment made, but they should not be permitted to impose hardships on the public no more than the merchant should be allowed to profiteer.

FAVORS GOVERNMENT REGULATION AND CONTROL.

I favor such governmental regulation and control as will secure and safeguard the rights and interests of the great American public, such regulation and control as will preclude exorbitant tariffs, either freight or passenger, and such regulation and control as will give the employees of the roads the rights, compensation, hours, and working conditions to which they are entitled.

I am supporting this bill because it enlarges the authority of the Interstate Commerce Commission, vesting it with power to force union terminals in the matter of railroads and docks, thus expediting and facilitating both navigation and transportation. I expect to support this bill because it embodies and prescribes a remedy for that great bane to southern industry—car shortage. Under the provisions of this bill, upon proper complaint the Interstate Commerce Commission has the power and authority to so allocate the railway cars and equipment as to relieve a situation which has been so common and so detrimental to the coal fields and the quarriers of east Tennessee, and particularly my district. I shall support the bill because it provides a method of conciliation between the employer and the employee. While this bill does not attempt to prohibit or penalize strikes, if its provisions for the settlement of industrial disputes are observed and applied with proper intent and discretion there will be no strikes.

A FRIEND OF LABOR.

I believe that the laboring man is as worthy of his hire today as when that great principle was originally enunciated. I believe that there is no greater virtue in this life than human labor. I believe the man who earns his bread by the sweat of his brow possesses rights sacred, peculiar, and preeminent. I realize that an effort has been made and is now being industriously and sedulously urged to create the impression that the laboring man is not loyal, that he is possessed of Bolshevik tendencies, and that sooner or later he is going to precipitate revolution. I do not believe a greater slander was ever uttered. The laboring man—organized and unorganized—is the salt of the earth. He is the bone and sinew of society and the bulwark of the Republic. The test of his loyalty is recorded "in Flanders fields, where poppies grow," as well as on the Liberty bond and war savings stamp records of the Treasury Department.

The agents of the red flag, radicalism, and Bolshevism are seeking to take advantage of our industrial unrest. We are facing a critical period. Every true, patriotic American citizen—capitalist or laboring man—will stand firm like the Rock of Gibraltar for American principles and American institutions.

INVOKES GOLDEN RULE.

There is no better precept than that laid down by the meek and lowly Nazarene, which in effect is the modern golden rule. We must "give and take" in our industrial and commercial relations and transactions. We are all Americans and ought to be for America. The eloquent sentiments of Stephen Decatur are peculiarly apropos to-day: "My country, may she ever be right, but right or wrong, my country."

No real American will do anything that may soil the escutcheon of Uncle Sam or bring shame, disgrace, or discredit to Old Glory.

The Constitution with Respect to the Covenant of the League of Nations.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WELLS GOODYKOONTZ,

OF WEST VIRGINIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, November 19, 1919.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting an address delivered by me at a banquet given in honor of the West Virginia Bar Association, at Fairmont,. W. Va., July 23, 1919, which address is on the subject of the Constitution of the United States with respect to the covenant of the league of nations.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The address is as follows:

"In the treaty of peace with Germany, signed at Versailles, near the city of Paris, on the 28th day of June, there is incorporated as Part I thereof the covenant of the league of nations. The covenant is made up of a preamble, which declares that the purpose of the signers is 'to promote international cooperation and to achieve international peace and security,' and of 26 articles, which contain the stipulations, and an annex specifying the names of the original members of the league and a list of States invited to accede to the covenant.

"Much has been said for and against the covenant. Argument has served only to confuse and bewilder. As a result of the preachings of those who have been going about the country advising the people pro and con, the whole matter has become nebulous and the minds of the people distracted, not knowing whom or what to believe; and, being in the same quandary myself, I have, within the limits of time at my disposal, made an examination and study of the instrument on purpose to inform myself in order that I might, as a legislative official of the Government, impart that information to those whom I have the honor to represent whenever occasion should require.

"It has been said in argument that the adoption of the league would expose the Nation to domination by non-Caucasian races and would endanger the rights of the people in respect to their religious freedom. The contention of Senator REED is that if the league were established the East Indian and yellow races would combine and hold dominion over the white race, and therefore, on account of ethnological considerations, the covenant should be defeated. Another contention—that of Senator SHERMAN—is that the establishment of the league would give opportunity for the return to temporal power of the Holy Roman See, eventuating in the union of the church and State. I certainly do not share the views of the Senators which I have just outlined.

"There are certain ignoble persons who would capitalize the issue for mere partisan purposes. Then there are those who rail out at the President. Those who do this weaken their cause.

"This is an American question of supreme importance, involving the very existence of the Government and its right to endure, its mission being primarily to guarantee the happiness and freedom of its own people, and, secondly, to aid the weak and heavy-laden elsewhere in the world; and the proposition therefore transcends mere sectional and party considerations.

"That the terms and conditions of the covenant were vague and indefinite and that the variant constructions and interpretations placed upon them were the result of such vagueness and uncertainty was the impression I received as a result of a cursory examination of the paper.

"The impression thus made was after more careful study dissipated. The conclusion to which I have arrived is that the meaning of the covenant may be found in the text; but that the meaning is generally well covered up, at least so far as the understanding of a layman is concerned. In none of the articles do we find a matter concerning which our antagonism might be aroused set forth in plain language in complete form. It is only when we examine an article, not necessarily as to its own independent meaning, but as to its bearing on some other article, and as supplementing in a dangerous manner that other article, that we are able to comprehend the dangers involved.

"The crafty statesmen of Europe, long schooled in diplomacy and in intrigue, aided by one Gen. Smuts, of Africa, caucused for months upon the form of this paper and perfected it in language so subtle as to conceal from the ordinary man and woman its true meaning. If you do not believe what I say, submit the paper to a farmer, merchant, banker, or school-teacher and ask him if he comprehends the meaning of it.

"Certain patent provisions of the covenant are the following:

"(1) A governing board, called a 'council,' is created to consist of nine members—the United States of America, the British Empire, France, Italy, Japan, and temporarily Belgium, Brazil, Spain, and Greece.

"What do the American people think of submitting their rights of sovereignty and independence to this coteric of foreigners? Certain of the nations, especially France, Belgium, Greece, and Italy, are bankrupt. They feel that America is rich and should divide with them. They expect us to cancel the debt they owe us on account of the war loans. Some of them actually hate us; especially is this true of Japan, Italy, and Spain; and Brazil, in common with all South American countries, has very little use for us.

"Our ancient friendship for France has been strained; our aid in the war is not appreciated. Frenchmen think we have merely discharged a duty, and hardly have done that because we were so tardy in getting into the war. Great Britain will undoubtedly control the league. The Revolution was fought that we might be freed from the tyranny of Great Britain, but now it is proposed by treaty to put our great country and its people again at her disposition and to be handled by her according to her imperial will. Our people will do well to take notice of the struggle of Ireland for liberty and freedom.

"Britain with her 35,000 vessels rules the seas. On this point it is pertinent to inquire what has become of the doctrine 'freedom of the seas.' The covenant of the league on the subject is as silent as the tomb. The covenant provides for—

"(2) A more numerous body, called an 'assembly,' the latter being the representatives of the nations who are members of the league.

"It is interesting to note in passing that our Government, representing 48 States, is to have but one member, whereas Great Britain is to have six in the assembly. England takes one for herself and one each for Canada, Australia, South Africa, India, and New Zealand. May I be permitted to inquire why New Zealand and India should have each a representative, whereas the imperial States of New York and Illinois have none?

"(3) A 'permanent court of international justice' is intended to be created by the league. This court shall be competent to hear and determine any dispute of an international character 'which the parties thereto submit to it.'

"Reading the language I have quoted one would think that the question of submitting the controversy was for the voluntary action of the parties, but such is not the case. Such action is involuntary and mandatory and in case of refusal coercion will be resorted to.

"The members of the league engage not to go to war without doing one of two things—either they shall submit the controversy to arbitration and award, agreeing that the decision shall be binding, or else submit the same to judicial inquiry. The pledge to do one of these two things is absolute and unconditional, and if the pledge be violated then force will be imposed and pressure applied by enonomic blockade, the boycott, or stern punishment inflicted by the combined armies and navies of the league to such an extent as may be necessary to bring the recalcitrant into submission.

"(4) Matters cognizable by the permanent court of international justice are (a) disputes as to the interpretation of a treaty, (b) as to any question of international law, (c) as to the existence of any fact which, if established, would constitute a breach of an international obligation, (d) any damages for such breach.

"(5) The judgments of the court created by the league will be executed in manner as I have already stated, and the council of the league will recommend what quota of armed forces and expense each nation shall contribute.

"The avowed object of the league is to command peace and secure it—by force when necessary—throughout the earth.

"The question of accepting the covenant is of present and great importance, in view of the fact, as stated by the Literary Digest, there are being waged right now no less than 23 wars. The American people can hardly believe this to be a fact, but the statement is true, none the less. Press censorship has kept the people from knowledge of the terrible conditions now prevailing throughout the Old World.

"The President is whispering in the ears of Senators intelligence of the seething, boiling, burning conditions of Europe and Asia and Africa, and we are expected at our expense to send our boys over there to give up their young lives in an effort to restore the equilibrium.

"If the Senate shall ratify the league, Congress will be forced to make appropriations to cover the cost of sending back to Europe thousands of soldiers to maintain order between the Poles, the Czecho-Slovaks, the Jugo-Slavs, the Finns, the Bolsheviki, the Letts, the Ukrainians, the Ruthenians, the Esthonians, the Bulgars, the Afghans, and the Egyptians—the latter two being uprisings against British rule. And this is the reason why the War Department objected to having the Army reduced below 600,000 men.

"We all know the argument for the league. All say that concerted effort to prevent wars ought to be made, and I accede to that proposition. But the President in his dreaming has seen a 'vision,' and vision it is, for no more visionary, impractical, or greater heresy was ever preached than the advocacy of the unqualified acceptance of the instrument in question, for, instead of a league of peace, it is a covenant that will engender strife and be operated so as to breed and prosecute wars.

"If we accept the covenant, time will prove, I do not doubt, the instrument—using Isaiah's rather strong expression—to be a 'league with the devil and an agreement with hell,' and the mother whose son shall fall on foreign soil because, forsooth, the President saw a vision will corroborate what I have said.

"In the Chamber of the Senate I heard Mr. Wilson deliver his famous message on the subject of the German treaty and the covenant of the league, to which he and his colleagues had subscribed their names as representatives of this Government, and as I listened my mind filled with anxiety for the danger that confronted us. I grant that the President is an extraordinary man and a very great American, but how many times has he, just as other Presidents, made mistakes? How many times has he been compelled to reverse his own opinions and decisions? In this country millions will follow his lead without question upon the fiction that 'the king can do no wrong.'

"The framers of the Constitution, by the terms of that fundamental instrument, in wisdom ordained that the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, might enter into treaties, and, furthermore, that the Constitution and the treaties thereunder, when made, should become and be the supreme law of the land.

"The argument presented by those who oppose the confirmation of the treaty and the covenant incorporated therein, that the terms of the covenant are in contravention of the organic law, in my opinion, is not sound. The power to make a treaty carries with it the power of enforcing it, just as the power of a court to pronounce and enter judgment carries with it, as a corollary, the authority to carry that judgment into execution. In such instances the right of enforcement is but the complement of the antecedent action. The right of the Nation to enter into an international engagement, called a treaty, is not only authorized by the Constitution but is an attribute of sovereignty.

"The articles of agreement entered into at Versailles, designated a treaty, embody therein the covenant of the league, which is a part of the treaty. We have been told that the rose by any other name would smell as sweet. We look at the substance and, indeed, the form, and there we see all the indicia of an international agreement of such vast scope and almost indescribable ramifications as to place the instrument not only in the category of treaties, but a treaty of the first magnitude of such proportions as was scarcely ever before dreamed of, much less written. Therefore I say that those who proceed ad arguendo to say that the Senate should not ratify the covenant because of constitutional impediments are laboring under a misconception of a proper construction of the Constitution, for the Constitution allows the treaty to be made and declares that when it is made it shall be the supreme law.

"That the President negotiated and, on behalf of the Government, signed the treaty, with the covenant embodied therein, is an accomplished fact; and that in so doing the President neither sought nor had the advice and consent of the Senate is a conceded fact. But if the Senate shall see fit to ratify the action of the Executive, there can be no escape, for the Government will then be bound, manacled, and shackled hand and foot. And this, I say, may be done within the limitations of the Constitution. But assuming, for the purpose of argument, that the Constitution does not admit of the making of a treaty possessing the character of the one under consideration, and further assuming that the Supreme Court should so hold, what then? The answer is that the judgments and decrees of the Supreme Court are not binding upon the league and that the mandates of that august tribunal would carry no more authority than the findings of a moot court; that only the international court, the world tribunal, organized under authority of the league of nine members, eight of them foreigners, alone had jurisdiction; and submitting our cause to the arbitrament of these international judges we should not be surprised if they, with gentle indifference to the terms of the Constitution, in their wisdom should find that the point made was without merit and that so little a thing as the Constitution of the United States should not be allowed to stand in the way of a world project; and that as in the case of the people of a nation where the laws undertake to provide for the greatest good to the greatest number, so in dealing with the immeasurably greater matter, a world of nations, and looking upon a single nation as only one of a world group and applying the doctrine the greatest good to the greatest number, this world tribunal might find it expedient to hold our feet to the fire, it mattered not how much we cried out. And from such adverse decision, upon this or any one of the thousands of other questions made cognizable by that international tribunal, what appeal could be taken? The answer is: None. There is no right of appeal. There is no higher tribunal. The court of first instance is also the court of dernier ressort. Our only possible remedy will have failed. And in that case we should not whimper, for we will have groomed a lion and placed our hand in his mouth.

"If the treaty be ratified, no longer can we say we are a sovereign, free, and independent nation. By delegating to the league the powers enumerated, the American Government will, in a measure, abdicate its rights to rule and govern the American people.

"In the councils of the league and in respect to the administration of law—by the court it might establish—our Nation would have just about as much voice as would one of you lawyers as to the conduct of a corporation in which you held one-ninth of the stock and the remainder whereof was held by certain disagreeable individuals, of which class there are representatives in most every community.

"The fact that the Constitution places no limitation upon the power of the treaty-making officers would not justify an acceptance of the provision for the establishment of the league. The framers of the Constitution thought that this great power could safely be intrusted to the President and the Senate combined—the former as head of the executive department, the latter as the most influential branch of the legislative department.

"But with great foresight and wisdom they ordained that two-thirds of the membership of the Senate must agree. We may suppose that at the time that the Constitution was written there was little apprehension of danger that a President and two-thirds of a Senate would at any time enter into alliances that would entangle us with foreign countries, especially with Great Britain, yet it was thought safer to require the composite judgment of a number of men rather than risk the decision of a single man.

"The power to ratify the Versailles treaty is therefore now reposed in the 96 Members of the Senate, and 64 of that number must vote in the affirmative in order to vitalize the document.

"A Senator is the keeper of his own conscience and responds to his own conviction agreeably with his oath of office. His responsibility will not be lessened by anything the Executive may do.

"The acceptance of the league involves repudiation of the declaration and, in substance, an abrogation and an abandonment of the Constitution by a surrender of liberty and independence—the most dearly bought and fondly cherished rights of the American people."

The Railroad Bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WILLIAM F. STEVENSON, OF SOUTH CAROLINA,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, November 17, 1919,

On the bill (H. R. 10453) to provide for the termination of Federal control of railroads and systems of transportation; to provide for the settlement of disputes between carriers and their employees; to further amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended, and for other purposes.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, I regret that I am unable to vote for this bill. It has some splendid provisions, but the disregard of the interests of the general public in caring for the interests of the carrier forbids my support. The principal reasons for voting against it are as follows:

First. The guaranty for six months by the United States of net income equal to the average income for 1915, 1916, 1917. The Government has increased the rates on freight 25 per cent and on passenger fare 50 per cent, and while cost of operation has increased, I believe that properly operated the average roads will show a profit on the first six months' business, and there will be no need of this guaranty. If the figures presented by the committee are correct, however, the Government will stand to give to the railroads $500,000,000 under this clause, and I am unalterably opposed to that.

Second. The railroads are directed in order to get the benefit of this guaranty to apply in 60 days for a raise in rates, and the proposition is to raise them 25 per cent. If this is done it is estimated that it will increase the cost of transportation from $500,000,000 to $750,000,000 per annum, and this increases the cost of living when the people not only expect a decrease in cost of living but in transportation rates in particular.

Third. It virtually destroys the power of the State to regulate intrastate rates and to control construction and abandonment of interstate roads.

It is contended that a vote against the bill is a vote to retain Government control and ultimate Government ownership. This is untrue. The President already has ample power to return the roads to their owners, and when he opened this Congress May 19 he announced that he expected to return them December 31 whether there was further legislation or not. I am opposed to the ownership of the railroads by the Government, but I am equally opposed to the ownership of the people by the railroads as proposed in this bill.

The Railroad Bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. S. D. FESS,
OF OHIO.
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, November 15, 1919,

On the bill (H. R. 10453) to provide for the termination of Federal control of railroads and systems of transportation; to provide for the settlement of disputes between carriers and their employees; to further amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended, and for other purposes.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, we are nearing the completion of the Esch railroad bill. Of the many steps of reconstruction in which we are passing from a war to a peace basis this is vastly the most important yet taken. When the war's demands were given as a reason for the administration to take over the transportation lines the Congress passed the necessary laws granting the necessary authority to do it. The Government's most unfortunate experience in political operation of the lines has convinced the country of the glaring failures of Government operation and it is hoped has settled for some time to come the question of Government ownership. It is now conceded that the country generally condemns it, and its proponents are limited to the professional socialists, together with the class of workers who think they can drive better bargains with the Government than with the owners. The Republicans on the night of May 17 in caucus declared for the return of the roads. The President in his address before Congress declared his intention to return them by January 1, 1920.

The excessive burdens placed upon the lines by the Government and the frightful deficit entailed to be made up out of the Federal Treasury rendered it impossible to prevent bankruptcy of the roads when turned back unless remedial legislation was enacted. This task was undertaken. The committee opened hearings in July and continued them 13 weeks, sitting morning and afternoon daily. Before the committee appeared the best representatives of the various plans of solution proposed, to give expert information from their respective angles. There were at least seven prominent plans presented. They are commonly known as the Cummins or Senate plan, the Esch or Commerce Commission plan, the railway executives' plan, the chamber of commerce plan, the Warfield plan, the National Railroad League plan, and the Plumb plan. Specifically stated, the Plumb plan was the employees' plan of sovietizing the roads, the Warfield plan was the proposal of the holders of railroad securities, the executives' plan was the proposal of the owners of the roads. Each of these was urged from the angle of interests. The chief item of the executives' plan was profit of a business enterprise. The chief item of the Warfield plan was income from securities, while that of the Plumb plan was wages. The committee collected and published these facts and statements of all the interested parties that appeared. These hearings supply the greatest body of expert information by the the highest authorities on the most important industry, outside of agriculture, ever collected by any legislative committee of the House of Representatives. Here is brought together in the form of briefs the strongest presentation of respective solutions of the transportation problem, based upon an assembling of facts, that ability can supply. Each individual plan has much to commend itself to the legislator, and each had to be weighed and considered. It is needless to assert that each had essentials in the solution. The problem of the committee was apparent and its duty was plain. It was necessary to view every plan from the angle of public welfare. It was inevitable that the primary item in the Plumb plan, as emphasized by the proponents, was wages. The primary item in the executives' plan was profit, while in the Warfield plan it was guaranteed income on securities. All these had to be considered not merely for the recognition of the factors represented by each, but for the sake of the public as well. The owners, whose capital was necessary to build a system of transportation, have inherent rights in reasonable profit upon the investment. Above and beyond that the public has an interest in seeing that the roads are profitable, else there will be no funds seeking investment in rail securities, without which improvements and betterments necessary for the needs of a growing country are impossible, and consequent disturbance of the public weal is inevitable. Profitable industry is at once an imperative necessity in transportation in the United States. The insistence in certain quarters to abolish capital in the roads is at once unscientific and economic nonsense. Profit is necessary, but it is not the all-important nor the only item.

The employees' rights must be considered. This is also not alone from the angle of the employees but that of the public, as the best possible conditions for labor become of public concern when efficiency of service is in question. Labor has the right of steady employment if possible, the most healthful and favorable conditions under which to work, and at a scale of wages to maintain an American standard of living. But as the roads can not be run for profit alone, neither can they be run for wages alone. The Plumb plan is impossible, because it is an attempt to sovietize the transportation lines of the country and operate them by the employees for the employees. No successful industry can eliminate the directive genius. The security holders must be considered also, not only on behalf of their rights, but of the public, which largely depends for service on the interests of the holders to insure efficient and economic service that the enterprise may be managed on a profit basis.

While the legislator must keep in mind the interests of all these parties, his chief concern must always be the larger factor, the public, which includes both the employer and the employee. He must guard himself against prejudice on the one side and fear on the other. His legislative conduct must not be determined by desire to favor any one class nor punish another class. It must be dictated by a determination to do justice to all, and especially to guard well the rights of the great unorganized public whose servant every Congressman should aspire to be.

The Esch railroad bill is an honest effort to legislate on this basis. It incorporates some features recommended by many interests and refused others. It abandons Government operation for private management, but retains many features introduced by public operation, such as common terminals. It terminates political management for efficient responsible operation where selfish interest must serve economic management and efficient service, the two items for which the public are willing to pay. The bill proposes to turn the roads back under such condition as to allow the roads to succeed under the stupendous handicap inherited by Government operation. The enormous increase of operating expenses fixed by political management which may become permanent must be offset by economies introduced under the less expensive and extravagant operation by private management. To insure the public against undue advantage it gives the Interstate Commerce Commission adequate power to represent the public's interests. It permits increase of rates under the approval of this Government agency, which speaks for the public. It thus attempts to provide a profit basis to insure the needed credit on the one side and guards against undue burdens on the public on the other side.

The most difficult item in the solution, next to credit, was that of wages. The bill attempted to establish effective machinery for the settlement of labor disputes. The bill was amended, unfortunately, by eliminating the effectual agency which fixed responsibility for the observance of a contract both by employer and employee. This, in my judgment, was a vital error. The attempt to write into the bill a provision to forbid during the pendency of the adjustment either a lockout or a strike was successfully resisted. This, in my judgment, is an unfortunate omission. The public have a right to demand the machinery for the adjustment of labor disputes and to be exempt from injuries incident to either lockouts or strikes during the adjustment. Unfortunately both of these items were opposed by labor leaders and were omitted. In my judgment, the time demands definite steps to meet these industrial upheavals. The Government can not be commanded save by the whole people. No group, either employers or employees, must be allowed to deal in ultimatums when the Government is a party in dispute, which must always be the case when the public are involved.

The recent efforts to sovietize industry are ominous. The radical leadership witnessed in the demands of the Plumb-plan proponents, in the steel strike, and in the coal strike points in its final analysis to but one goal. It is an attempt under the guise of dispute over wage scale to revolutionize the industries under the claim of democratization of industry, which to this radical leadership is the first step to sovietism. The safety of the country lies in a saner leadership. There is no doubt that American labor is sound and patriotic at heart; it must not be allowed to be rushed into revolution by these revolutionists "boring from within." We must without fear or favor set our faces as a Nation against this attempt to Russianize the labor and industries of this country. It is against this foreign leadership that our labor must be warned. If it loses to them, the Government must for the sake of labor, as well as the public, take steps to effectually thwart the dangerous propaganda. The most important factor to be considered in this legislation is the effectual method of insuring successful transportation, so as to avoid the necessity of resuming Government ownership with the roads under the domination of a leadership which will attempt, as in 1916, to give orders to the Government under the threat of a nation-wide strike.

The Cummins bill contains an antistrike provision. There is a growing belief that while the right to quit work is a fundamental American right with which the Government does not wish to interfere, the right must not be construed to reach a total destruction of the rights of the public. In other words, if the issue should be presented whether a basic industry, such as coal mining, should be tied up to the extent of closing up the kindred basic industries, such as transportation, which would present a starvation situation before the cities as well as untold suffering from freezing, the Government must find a way to prevent it, even if it compels the working of the mines. The Interstate Commerce Commission plan looked to an adjustment of such disputes, during the pendency of which neither lockouts nor strikes were to be allowed. This is in accord with the recommendation of President Wilson in his message in 1916. The Cummins bill goes to that extent. The Esch bill did not contain that provision, but it did provide against the violation of the contract by either party, with a penalty attached. This provision was looked upon as an effectual protection of the public in case of a dispute which extended to a violation of contracts. Unfortunately, labor resisted this provision and backed a substitute, the Anderson amendment, which contained merely voluntary machinery, with no authority whatever to enforce its decisions. It is an attempt to talk over questions of dispute in case parties are willing to do so. No action can be enforced, no matter what conclusions may be reached. It does not include all the parties in labor interested in transportation and entirely omits the one great factor, the public. It is most regrettable that at this time, when we are dealing with this basic industry of transportation, that we failed to insert an effectual plan, creating the machinery of adjustment which is both official and authoritative, before which disputes affecting the public must be carried, and during the pendency of the dispute neither lockout nor strike to be allowed under penalty of the law. This should have been done for the sake of the vast population who must innocently suffer from industrial disputes, and it would ultimately be in favor of labor as well as capital.

This Nation must realize that we must sooner or later force the problem of respect for law. The Government must insist upon respect for its sovereignty. It must serve the notice to all its citizens, and it can not accept ultimatums from any group, but in the interest of all it must make itself supreme.

Government Bulletins and Scientific Farming.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOHN W. SUMMERS,
OF WASHINGTON,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, November 19, 1919.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, the various departments of the Government employ an army of experts along almost every conceivable line of human interest and endeavor. They are preparing and publishing bulletins literally by the thousands. Great benefit comes to our citizens by placing these bulletins in their hands, but I am fully persuaded that unless some better system is devised of bringing these publications to the attention of the masses much highly specialized information will avail us nothing.

I came into office fully determined to try to represent all the citizens of all the counties of my district, and unless I can bring to them the fullest opportunity to grasp the good things this Government has to offer I shall have fallen short of my ambition and my standard.

Mine is an agricultural and a horticultural district. In fact, southeastern Washington, which I have the honor to represent, contains the most highly productive wheat fields in all the world. My district also leads the world in the quality, quantity, and value of apples grown.

I might particularize and say that Whitman County, Wash., which is not irrigated, probably produces more wheat than any other county in the United States, and that she probably also holds first place among all the counties of the United States in the total value of her farm products.

Yakima County, Wash., due wholly to irrigation, this year produces more apples and of greater value than any other county in the United States, and is also a competitor for first place as the leading agricultural county in the United States.

The productive wheat and barley fields and the orchards of Columbia, Asotin, Klickitat, and Benton Counties, and the wheat fields of Garfield, Adams, Franklin, and Grant Counties all contribute their share to the wealth of the "inland empire." Kittitas County is famous throughout the West for the quality and the quantity of her alfalfa.

Walla Walla County, Wash., leads the world in her per-acre production of wheat, while her orchards, alfalfa fields, and gardens and her matchless soil and climate stamp her by no less an authority than the First Assistant Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Vogelsang, as the "garden spot of the world."

But, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, while we surpass most other districts in the United States in climate and soil, there is yet another element that contributes to our success.

Through the extension courses of our State college at Pullman, Wash., and by cooperation with the Federal Government, our people have become scientific farmers and scientific horticulturists.

In order to render further assistance along this line, I am bringing the whole subject of Government bulletins to their attention in the following letter:

WASHINGTON, D. C.

MY DEAR FRIEND: The Departments of the Interior, Labor, Commerce, Bureau of Public Health, etc., issue bulletins covering almost every subject of general interest. I will gladly supply you with any of these on request.

On the inclosed leaflet you will find listed bulletins on many subjects of interest to farmers, housekeepers, and others. These bulletins are written by Government experts and doubtless some of them will be of interest to you or to members of your family.

If upon looking this leaflet over you find four or five bulletins you like, draw a short line in front of the number, write your name and post-office address very plainly at the top of the leaflet, and mail it back to me, and I will take pleasure in sending you such as are available.

I will make no general distribution of seeds, but until my allotment is exhausted, I will be glad to send a combination package to those who request them. I can only send such variety as is allotted me.

If any soldier, or his family, has failed to obtain 5 cents per mile travel pay, $60 bonus, uniform, equipment, allotment, allowance, or insurance due, I will gladly extend all possible aid in securing the same.

Very sincerely,

_____.

If by this means I can contribute in some small degree to the further success of my constituents and can at the same time assist some patriotic family in securing a final settlement with the Government, I shall feel fully repaid for all of my efforts.

Neutral Zones.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CLAY STONE BRIGGS,
OF TEXAS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, November 19, 1919.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Speaker, the pendency in Congress of bills to permit the establishment of "free zones" at ports of the United States has attracted the attention of the whole country to the wonderfully rich trade opportunities offered to this Nation through the medium of the "zone" system.

A plan which, if adopted, promises to give American interests a substantial if not controlling part of a special foreign export business that is estimated in the aggregate at $4,000,000,000 a year—surely a prize not to be despised by any nation—and yet in the past one that America has allowed to be monopolized by Europe and particularly the countries of Germany and Denmark.

"Free zones," so called, have no relation to either the principles or doctrine of free trade or those of the tariff. The name is intended solely to designate restricted areas at ports of entry, and any other designated places where foreign goods may be landed and held for sorting, assembling, repacking, mixing, blending, storage, milling, or manufacture and transshipment without the payment of customs duties unless such imports are brought into the United States from such areas.

The use of the word "free" in connection with "zone" has a tendency to be confusing and misleading, but in no sense does it indicate an entry into the United States of dutiable goods free from the payment of any customs charges or tariffs. On the contrary it is distinctly recognized and provided that no goods can be introduced into the United States from "free zones" without first paying all customs duties which the law prescribes such articles shall bear. A clearer conception of just what such a zone is, as suggested by the Tariff Commission, is obtained by the use of the term "neutral zone." In such limited territory the operation of the customs laws are suspended as long as foreign goods or imports remain there or are shipped to other countries; but such areas or zones are guarded by customs officers at all times, at the expense of the agencies operating the zones, to see that no goods enter the United States without the payment of all customs duties.

The owners of the goods can therefore exercise the fullest control over them as long as they remain in the zone area, without the hindrances and restrictions, which, under existing conditions, operate to harass and retard the distribution, handling, and transshipment of such goods to foreign lands.

Some seem to think that the idea of the free or neutral zone originated with Hamburg, Germany, when she established in 1882 this apparently novel method of developing and building up a great trade in foreign goods that only touched that port for sorting, repacking, or redistribution before being exported again to another country, without once having entered Germany. But the United States, even as far back as 1799, gave expression to the same idea, though in a more restricted and far less successful form. The present movement for such zones is therefore not the announcement of any new policy on the part of this country. In the year last mentioned, the United States provided by law for the drawback or refund of duties, when foreign goods which may be imported here are subsequently exported to any foreign port, other than the dominions of any foreign state immediately adjoining the United States. But this plan contemplates and requires the payment of duties as an initial step without any alternative choice.

Later on, in 1842, a limitation was provided that to secure the drawback or refund the merchandise must be exported within three years from the date of the importation of same. And at the same time it was further provided that 1 per cent on the amount of all drawbacks allowed shall be retained for the Government. Thus it is that the allowance to-day under the present drawback provision in force is for 99 per cent of the duties paid.

The experiences under the cumbersome drawback system, while developing the usefulness of the basic policy, also disclosed a too-restrictive operation of the plan. Hence additional legislation in 1842 brought into operation the bonded warehouse. Through this method of entry foreign goods could be imported into the United States and stored in what are known as bonded warehouses for a period of three years upon the owner or importer giving a satisfactory bond in double the amount of the duties. But the duties themselves were not required to be paid if the goods were exported to foreign countries within the period indicated. It was only when the merchandise, or any part of it, was taken out of such warehouses and brought into the United States that the customs duties had to be paid. If not removed within the time stated, the goods were regarded as abandoned to the Government.

Then being desirous of still further extending the method of making the policy already adopted even less restrictive than the limitations of the drawback and bonded warehouse plans would allow, Congress in 1913 made provision for the bonded manufacturing warehouses, where, without payment of duty, imported goods may be handled, altered, or manufactured solely for export, and in such manufacture be mixed, if desired, with domestic goods. Under this plan also the persons availing themselves of the privilege must give bonds for the customs duties and submit, as under the other two plans, to a number of irksome and embarrassing customs regulations, inspections, and restrictions.

It is these very restrictions, endless red tape, and constant customs inspections that render the plans in vogue so difficult to operate under in competition with the plan of the neutral zone. And while, as has already been shown, it has never been the purpose of our Government, no matter by what political party controlled, to impose customs duties on foreign goods imported into the United States when such goods were to be shipped within a reasonable time to other countries, yet the methods adopted to carry such purpose into effect have become so ineffective and unduly restrictive that such declared purpose is in danger of being actually defeated and an enormous trade allowed to drift into the hands of foreign countries.

The United States Tariff Commission, in an exhaustive review of the whole situation, gives some of the more conspicuous restrictions that operate to render the present plans so hopelessly inadequate.

With reference to the drawback or refund of duties, the commission, after setting out a table showing imported articles subsequently exported in manufactured form, upon which drawback was paid, remarks that it is obvious from such figures given in the table that scores of industries in this country that now use foreign materials in the production of goods for export do not exercise the drawback privileges at all, the reason being that for the prevention of fraud the privilege is so hedged about with exacting and intricate regulations that the amount of the drawback very often does not pay for the labor and cost of collecting it.

And as illustrative of the practical impossibility of making use of the drawback privilege, under ordinary conditions, upon a large scale, by an industry of average size, the following illustration is cited by the commission as actually developed at the hearings conducted by that nonpartisan body. The evidence, it seems, disclosed that the rice-milling industry can not operate more than half the year when dependent alone on the domestic crop of rice. Efforts, therefore, have been made to use the idle months in cleaning and milling foreign rice for reexport to the West Indies and Spanish America. To do this work profitably it was shown that the rice must be imported in full shipload cargoes and handled in bulk through grain elevators. The cargoes are usually about 6,000 tons each, and as there is an average duty of one-half cent a pound, the duty that must be paid on a full cargo is $60,000. The importer would, of course, be entitled to a drawback on such quantity of the rice as was reexported, but the commission states that it was the unanimous testimony of the mill officials interviewed that the business had to be discontinued because of the difficulty, delay, and expense of securing the drawback.

It must be further understood that in order to recover drawback, even after reshipment, evidence must be furnished this Government of the actual landing of the goods in a foreign country. Aside from the delays and tying up of a large part of the working capital, it is apparent that the risk of losing from hazards of different kinds the capital itself, through failure of such goods often to arrive in such foreign country, is so great as to preclude a general use of such plan.

In the case of bonded warehouses, specific instances of some of the more hampering restrictions were given, among which are the requirements that vessels must submit to the same formalities and regulations, whether they bring dutiable goods or goods to be placed in bond; and the goods themselves, no matter if destined for reexport, have to be valued, sampled, weighed, and tested before removal from the dock. This, it is apparent, entails much expense and delay, and also adds to the accumulation and sometimes congestion of cargoes at ports where a large volume of business passes over the docks.

Moreover the bond which the owner or importer in such cases must give in double the mount of the duty is subject to forfeiture if the goods are stolen, lost, destroyed, or fraudulently removed. It has been suggested that the owner of the bonded warehouse ought to be the only one to give the security required for the safekeeping of the goods, but this suggestion has not been adopted.

One of the most serious restrictions of the present bonded warehouse plan is that it denies the owner or exporter, except in cases of serious damage, the right to handle, sort, assemble, mix, or repack the imported goods, even though in a bonded warehouse and under the supervision of a customs inspector. The denial of this privilege—one that is enjoyed by all competitors operating neutral zones in foreign countries—is to practically make it impossible to compete with those who elsewhere are accorded the privilege in its fullest enjoyment.

One American exporter testified before the Tariff Commission that his firm found it necessary to take goods from bonded warehouses in the United States and ship them to a West Indian port, where they might be repacked and thence forwarded to destination.

Another glaring insufficiency of the present system is evidenced by the further recorded experience of an American firm dealing in foreign embroideries. It seems that the Canadian law treats goods held in American bonded warehouses just as if they had entered domestic commerce, and, if exported to Canada, assesses duty on the foreign value of such goods, increased by the amount of duty they would have paid if they had entered the United States for domestic consumption. To avoid the effect of such regulation and fill a Canadian order, the American firm was compelled to send goods from such bonded warehouse in New York all the way to England, where the goods were reinvoiced and thence shipped direct to Canada. And so the great value of the trade in question rests in the freedom from restrictions in a great forwarding business. Just as goods in the domestic trade must be arranged and put up in different forms and packages to suit different classes of trade, so in this transshipment enterprise the same factors enter; and without the right to handle, sort, rearrange, and distribute in the form desired by the buyers of other countries, the trade can not be either developed or retained when competitors are able to meet the demands which American exporters can not meet.

In the neutral or free zone, however, policed by the customs authorities at the expense of the organization in control of the zone, all operations of the customs laws would be suspended. No duties need be advanced; no constant customs restraints and regulations imposed; no denial of the privilege of repacking, sorting, blending, assembling, mixing, or milling experienced; no outlay of large parts of operating capital required to be tied up in duties, and endless difficulties encountered in getting it back within a reasonable time, if at all. And yet, when any of those goods move out of such zone into domestic commerce, all duties must at once be fully paid. A zone where our own buyers may see the foreign goods themselves before purchase or transshipment, instead of having to depend upon samples which now they are not even able to compare with the delivered product until the duty is paid.

There is another and important development that further emphasizes the need of the neutral zone. It is the expansion of American shipping and the absolute need of cargoes for it, in the absence of artificial aids, if it is not to be operated in normal times at a loss and driven from the high seas by ships of other nations. Such cargoes must include imports as well as exports. It will probably be true that such imports will not find a large enough market in this country to consume them, and that we must arrange to place them in other countries where hey are desired. If we are able to do this with any degree of success, in competition with other countries where free or neutral zones exist, as in Germany, Denmark, Sweden, Spain, Portugal, and other countries with tariff laws, we must enjoy the same zone system and be able to transship upon equal terms foreign goods for which a demand exists elsewhere.

It will not alone be great ports like New York, Galveston, Philadelphia, New Orleans, and San Francisco that will find it necessary and advantageous to provide adequate facilities to establish and operate such neutral zones, but other ports will enjoy and should be granted the privilege of establishing such areas upon a proper and fair basis. Although the bills now before Congress contemplate the establishment of such zone areas only at ports, there does not appear to be any serious objection to the establishment of interior zones, to the extent, at least, of providing for manufacturing plants within them, which will convert foreign raw products into manufactured goods, either with or without the addition of American products, for export to foreign countries.

Past experience, however, has not yet demonstrated any great or conspicuous development of manufacturing interests in free zone areas.

The general bills before Congress are substantially along similar lines, with one noteworthy exception. The measure approved by the Tariff Commission, with proposed amendments, grants the privilege of establishing, operating, and maintaining free zones only to public corporations, defined to mean only a State, a legal subdivision thereof, or a municipality. The other measures authorize a grant to either public or private corporations with a provision that the Secretary of Commerce shall give preference to the applications of public corporations. It is also substantially provided that such corporations must operate such zones as public utilities, giving to all who apply the use of the zone upon equal terms, and that the rates and charges for services must be reasonable.

The Tariff Commission concluded its general report in 1918 to the Senate Commerce Committee at the second session, Sixty-fifth Congress, on the free zone plan with the following statement:

> After exhaustive study of foreign institutions and careful investigation of American conditions and mercantile opinion, the Tariff Commission recommends the policy of permitting the establishment of free zones in American ports, and indorses with certain suggested amendments the bill S. 4153, as shown in the reprint, analysis, and comment which follow.

The same approval is voiced by the commission in its letter and report at this session of Congress to the Ways and Means Committee of the House.

As a part of the report there is printed the indorsements and expressions from chambers of commerce, commercial associations, and trade bureaus from the cities of New York, Philadelphia, New Orleans, Galveston, and San Francisco, in which not only the proposed plan is strongly indorsed but convincing arguments advanced for its adoption.

At the recent hearings before the Senate Commerce Committee and the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives, the greatest interest was displayed in the furtherance of the zone plan, and representatives of the Government and both private and public bodies appeared to advocate its adoption. It is true opposition developed which seemed to rest upon the theory that in some way the proposed system might operate to the detriment of the protective-tariff principle, and that Mexico had not been able to make a success of some so-called zone system, established upon a part of her frontier. But it was a significant and cogent fact that some of the strongest advocates of the zone system before the congressional committees announced themselves as believers in the protective-tariff principle and asserted that they saw nothing in the zone plan that contained any threat against the tariff. In fact, the success of the zone plan in Hamburg did not interfere in the least with the maintenance of the German tariff schedules and an increase in the duties from time to time.

And it is a further fact of the greatest significance and force that our country as far back as 1799 adopted the free-zone policy, though not making any provision for the free zone itself, and constantly recognized and developed the extension of the idea through all periods of the adoption and application of the highest protective tariffs in the United States.

The constitutionality of such proposed legislation is undoubted. The provision of clause 6, section 9, of article 1 of the Federal Constitution that "no preference shall be given by any regulation of commerce or revenue to the ports of one State over those of another" has no application whatever.

As far back as the case of Pennsylvania v. Bridge Co. (18 How. (U. S.), 421) the United States Supreme Court said that—

> It is a mistake to assume that Congress is forbidden to give preference to a port in one State over a port in another. Such preference is given in every instance where it makes a port in one State a port of entry and refuses to make another port in another State a port of entry. No greater preference, in one sense, can be more directly given them in this way, and yet the power to give it has never been questioned.

Congress has enacted legislation accordingly, which has been on the statute books for many years and has never been questioned seriously since the bridge company case.

Illustrative instances are continued in the act of June 10, 1880, Twenty-first Statutes at Large, page 173, distinctly singling out specially named ports for certain privileges and asserting—> that the privilege of transportation herein conferred shall not extend to any place at which there are not necessary officers for the appraisement of merchandise and the collection of duties.

The act of March 24, 1874, Eighteenth Statutes at Large, page 24, also provides for importers' bonded warehouses for storage and cleaning of rice at ports of entry. Article 2771, Revised Statutes, also provides—> that vessels which are not vessels of the United States shall be admitted to unload only at ports of entry established by law.

If such legislation is constitutional, why can not Congress prescribe that unless certain facilities obtain at certain ports they can not enjoy the privileges of free zones?

The proposed system challenges the attention and consideration of the commercial interests of America and offers opportunity for commercial supremacy that rarely comes to any nation under such promising conditions for success.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN M. EVANS,

OF MONTANA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, November 15, 1919,

On the bill (H. R. 10453) to provide for the termination of Federal control of railroads and systems of transportation; to provide for the settlement of disputes between carriers and their employees; to further amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended, and for other purposes.

Mr. EVANS of Montana. Mr. Speaker, I am for the Hayden amendment, and if that fails I am for the Sims proposition. I prefer the Hayden amendment. It is an exact copy of the provisions of the Poindexter bill and has been favorably considered and reported by the Senate committee.

This proposition means simply this, to prevent the charge of a greater freight rate for a shorter distance than for a longer distance when the freight is moved in the same direction over the same road and the shorter haul is included within the longer. This matter has been before the American people for many years and has been legislated on a number of times. In 1910 congressional action was taken largely by the efforts of Senator Joseph M. Dixon, of my State. It was then believed that the relief so manifestly denied the people of the great interior country would be granted. It now seems that by a ruling of the Interstate Commerce Commission the relief we feel is due us is again to be denied.

Section 4 of the interstate-commerce act has to do with the long-and-short haul. It provides that a common carrier may not charge in interstate commerce more for hauling goods a shorter distance than it may charge for hauling it the longer distance, the charges being for service in hauling cars going the same direction and the shorter distance being part of the longer. There was a provision, however, in this law giving to the Interstate Commerce Commission the power to make exceptions when it seemed that by reason of water competition an injustice would be imposed upon the common carrier. It was not supposed, however, that the exception would come to constitute the dominant and controlling feature of the section. It was supposed that the proviso would take care of the unusual, of the extreme, cases, but just the opposite has occurred. The proviso has come to be a controlling element of the paragraph, and the part of the paragraph which denies the common carrier the right to charge more for the shorter distance than for the longer when the shorter is included within the longer distance has become the dominant feature of the law.

What is the reason for this discrimination? Why, the excuse is because of the water competition in favor of the coast points. When we became involved in the World War the ships that had been carrying commerce between the East and the West through the Panama Canal were largely drawn off from this service, and the very reason that had been used as the excuse for inequality in freight rates no longer existed.

On June 30, 1917, an order was issued wiping out discrimination in part. A little bit later this order was suspended, but on January 21, 1918, it was restored, effective March 15, 1918, and it has obtained until this time; but this does not mean that it will continue. On the other hand, it is a mere temporary provision calculated to meet war conditions, and will disappear, of course, with the termination of the war and the assumption of normal conditions. More than this, the relief granted since March 15, 1918, does not apply to eastbound traffic.

Let me illustrate how it works, and to make it plain let me localize my illustrations. I live in the little city of Missoula, in the western part of the State of Montana, about 800 miles east of Seattle, Wash. Two transcontinental railroads run through my town and on to Seattle. A man in my town wants to build a bridge for the county. He buys his steel at Chicago or Pittsburgh and ships to Missoula, and his freight is $1,500. If this same bridge was to be built in the vicinity of Seattle, the freight bill would be approximately $1,000, though it was shipped 700 miles farther and right through my town.

Suppose, again, a city in Montana puts in a system of waterworks. A city on the Pacific coast of the same size puts in an equivalent system. In both of these cities an equal number of tons of iron pipe was used, but the Montana city was compelled to pay $10,000 in excess freight rates alone, which must come from the people of that city, than was paid by the city on the Pacific coast that put in the identical water system and the iron for which was hauled on the same railroad tracks that delivered the iron to the Montana city, but was hauled 700 miles farther.

Let me give you another illustration of the conditions under which we are laboring: Here is Spokane, Wash., and the Stanton Meat Packing Co. is in business there. A few years ago the Stanton Meat Packing Co., having a surplus of lard, wanted to send it to Chicago, Ill., the packers there purchasing the lard. The carload weighed 62,100 pounds. Now, then, that called for an examination of the freight rates, and this is what they found: Rate from Spokane to Chicago was $1.25 per hundred; also rate from Spokane to Seattle, 50 cents; Seattle to Chicago, 60 cents; a total of $1.10. They found that they could send the quantity of lard from Spokane in one car to Chicago at $1.25 per hundred, or they could send the lard from Spokane to Seattle and then have their agent take and send it back again right through Spokane, making a round trip, or a joy ride, for the lard of 700 miles and on to Chicago for $1.10 per hundred. By doing this they could let the railroad company have the pleasure of hauling the lard from Spokane to Seattle, back to Spokane, on to Chicago, and do the whole thing $93.15 cheaper than they would do it if they could haul the carload of lard from Spokane to the city of Chicago.

If time would permit, I could multiply these illustrations a thousand times. Every merchant, every farmer, who ships a pound of freight, every citizen who lives west of the Mississippi and east of the Cascade Range of mountains, must bear this burden. At least 13,000,000 of them. It is not confined to the great Northwest from where I come, but the same conditions apply to a greater or less degree to all interior points.

There can be no sound economic reason for this artificial restraint upon trade and commerce. By what moral right, by what sort of reasoning, do we reach the conclusion that it is just to charge more for hauling a shorter distance than a longer one on the same road and in the same direction when the shorter is included in the greater? Is a half a loaf greater than a whole loaf? Is a half dollar more valuable than a dollar?

The Hayden amendment, which we are seeking to adopt, reads as follows:

That section 4 of the act to regulate commerce as amended be further amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4. (1) That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act to charge or receive any greater compensation in the aggregate for the transportation of passengers, or of like kind of property, for a shorter than for a longer distance over the same line or route in the same direction, the shorter being included within the longer distance, or to charge any greater compensation as a through route than the aggregate of the intermediate rates subject to the provisions of this act, but this shall not be construed as authorizing any common carrier within the terms of this act to charge or receive as great compensation for a shorter as for a longer distance.

"(2) Whenever a carrier by railroad shall, in competition with a water route or routes, reduce the rates on the carriage of any species of freight to or from competitive points, it shall not increase such rates unless after hearing and an order granting permission therefor by the Interstate Commerce Commission."

When the original section 4 of this act was passed it was intended and believed that it would be construed and executed as we demand by this amendment it shall be; unfortunately, the exception put in the original section has become the rule. We therefore desire to take from the Interstate Commerce Commission any and all discretion in the matter. We believe we are right and think this House must find no difficulty in reaching the same conclusion.

I am perfectly willing that any town or city with water transportation shall have and enjoy all the advantages nature has given them, but I am not willing that the people in some other community not so fortunately situated shall be penalized and taxed to support its more fortunate neighbor.

But it is urged that this discriminatory system is right because of water competition. Gentlemen, a great deal may be conceded to those who urge that the Pacific coast shall receive advantages by reason of water competition that will fall short of conceding that the unreasonable discriminatory rates that have existed shall continue to exist. Surely it is a concession when we say that goods may be shipped from Chicago or New York to Seattle, Wash., at a rate no greater than that which is charged for shipping the goods to Butte, Mont. We are not asking even that which it would seem we have the right to ask—that the rates to this intermountain country shall be less than to coast points. What we are asking is that they shall not be more.

If you say that the charges shall be the same, the intermountain country will then be bearing a burden that is much higher and much harder to bear than the burden placed on the Pacific coast cities and peoples. A greater burden, I say, for the reason that the people of the intermountain country are asked to pay an amount equal to that paid by the Pacific coast for service that is much less.

We built the Panama Canal a few years ago. It cost the people of the country something like one-half billion dollars. That money was not advanced by the people of the Pacific coast; it was not advanced by the people of the East; it was advanced by the people of all our country, and in that great project the people of the western and intermountain country have as great a right and interest as have the people of any other section. That being the case, we have a right to receive benefits to be attained by the completion of the canal; we were told everywhere was the scaling down of transportation charges between the East and the West. Is that a benefit that is to accrue to the West alone—that is, merely along the Pacific coast—or is it a benefit that should accrue to all the great West, including the Plains States and the States in the intermountain region?

Again, not only from the standpoint of fairness between man and man ought the contention that I am urging to prevail but from the standpoint of the building up of our country it should prevail. I am sure that the Congress does not want to deliberately grant better conditions to one group of cities than it grants to another group; yet that is precisely what is being done under the present law. When a merchant buys his goods in the eastern markets, ships them by rail to Portland or Seattle through Montana, and turns around and ships the same goods back to Montana points and lays them down at a less price than they can be shipped from the East, it is a clear discrimination in favor of cities on the Pacific coast as against those in Montana and other parts of the great West. Now, this discrimination is not only against cities that are already established in Utah, in Colorado, Idaho, Montana, and other States, but this discrimination works an injury upon those States as they attempt to invite new capital or to profitably invest the capital that is theirs as a result of years of toil and frugality.

What encouragement is there to offer? What inducement is there to present when the cities of the Pacific coast can say if you will establish your plant, your wholesale house, your factory with us we can show you that you can have cheaper freight rates than if you were to establish your institution in Butte or Salt Lake City or any other point in all that great empire of 13,000,000 people?

Mr. Speaker, it is wrong, and we hope this Congress will not perpetuate that wrong. We are asking no favors; we only ask for fair play.

We spend hundreds of millions of dollars annually to improve the Mississippi and other rivers, and yet let the railroads tax the interior points in order to reduce their rates at water competitive points, and so prevent any traffic on the rivers. Thirty years ago there were great freight carriers on the Mississippi, and what did the railroads do? Having all of the interior points to draw from, they put a freight rate on cotton from Memphis to New Orleans, 500 miles away, of 50 cents a bale, while they charge in cases where there is no river or water line, as from Corsicana to Galveston, $2.55 for 250 miles. Years ago, when boats were plying the Mississippi and hauling cotton, the roads reduced the rate to 50 cents a bale on cotton, and in like proportion on other freight, until they drove the freight off the river, and they still keep it low in order to prevent a reinstallation of boats on the river. If our cities on the rivers and on the coast rightly understood even their own interest, they would be content with the advantage that God has given them, and not seek to destroy that great opportunity for cheap transportation that nature gave our country in giving us our inland waterways; and we, the Congress, ought to see to it that the inland waterways of this country are utilized, and this will never be done until you get an amendment like the Hayden amendment, which forbids railroads to tax interior points to enable them to lower freight rates to water-competitive points and drive freight off the waterways of the country. It is so plain, it is so clear, that how any man looking at the interest of the whole country and voting for the expenditure of millions of dollars can fail to see it I do not understand.

The only possible way for the people who do not live on the banks of rivers to get any benefit from river improvement from the money taken out of the common Treasury to improve the rivers is to forbid the Interstate Commerce Commission to give these preferential rates, and thereby prevent river transportation, and then levy an additional tax upon the citizens who live off these rivers in the form of higher rail rates. The people who do not live on the banks of the rivers, or where they can get water transportation, would be better off if the Government refused absolutely to appropriate any money to improve any navigable waters, because they must pay their part of the tax, and the only result is that the railroads give these water competitive points preferential rates so low that they have to raise the rates on the rest of the people.

That, Mr. Speaker, is one of the reasons I have never voted for a river and harbor bill during my service in this House.

The Prohibition Bill.

A law which has not the people's moral support, nor the power of public opinion behind it, sooner or later falls into disuse and becomes an impotent instrument in the jurisdictions where the sentiment of the community is opposed to its enforcement.

HON. HENRY M. GOLDFOGLE,

OF NEW YORK,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, July 12, 1919.

The House in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6810) to prohibit intoxicating beverages, and to regulate the manufacture, production, use, and sale of high-proof spirits for other than beverage purposes, and to insure an ample supply of alcohol and promote its use in scientific research and in the development of fuel, dye, and other lawful industries.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, no one is more mindful of the duty of Congress to carry out the provisions of the Constitution than I am, but in my judgment the eighteenth amendment is so framed as to practically render it incapable of enforcing national prohibition, unless the legislation we adopt shall have the concurrence of the several States.

It may be that the promoters of the amendment had in mind merely to confer jurisdiction on Federal and State authorities to enforce such legislation as Congress should pass in furtherance of the first section which provides for prohibiton of intoxicating liquors. That, however, is not the language or substance of the amendment. It goes far beyond that. It requires concurrent legislation by both the Federal Government and the several States to effectuate national prohibition. It is not to be likened to constitutional or statutory provisions which provide for the enforcement of Federal laws through either Federal or State authority. It calls for concurrent legislation. It is the first time in our history that such a provision was ingrafted in any amendment to the Constitution.

If the legislation we adopt and that which the several States may adopt should seriously differ or be so inharmonious as to substantially conflict with each other, which code of enforcement, I ask you, would govern? How or under what known rule of law could both pieces of such legislation stand and be legally each carried into effect?

When the other day the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. VAILE] had the floor, I inquired of him what, in his judgment, would be the effect of such contradictory legislation should, for instance, the penalties differ, and he replied that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CURRIE] discussed that question, showing that a majority of the authorities held that the more severe penalty must be enforced. I deny that this is the governing rule. Nor do the authorities cited by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CURRIE] apply to such an anomalous case as is presented under the eighteenth amendment. In the cases or in most of them to which he had reference, the States had in their independent legislative power separately provided for certain violations of law, while the Federal Government had for similar acts provided punishment, but each had acted in its own separate and independent right of sovereignty. Here the amendment contemplates the same legislation, National and State, to bring to enforcement the inhibition, and I challenge any lawyer to point out any well-recognized authority which in an analogous case sustains the contention of the gentleman from Colorado.

I call your attention to a well-considered case decided by the United States Supreme Court, Houston versus Moore, reported in Fifth Wheaton's Reports, pages 3 to 76. In that case the learned justice delivering the opinion of the court said:

If in a specified case the people have thought proper to bestow powers on Congress as the safest depository of them, the people have reason to complain that the same powers should be exercised at the same time by the State legislatures. To subject them to the operation of two laws upon the same subject, dictated by distinct wills, particularly in a case inflicting pains and penalties, is, to my apprehension, something very much like oppression, if not worse.

Mark you the language of the eminent jurist—"something very much like oppression, if not worse."

In short, I am altogether incapable of comprehending how two distinct wills can at the same time be exercised in relation to the same subject to be effectual and at the same time compatible with each other. If they correspond in every respect, then the latter is idle and inoperative; if they differ, they must, in the nature of things, oppose each other so far as they do differ. If this one imposes a certain punishment for a certain offense, the presumption is that this was deemed sufficient and under all circumstances the only proper one. If the other legislature imposes a different punishment in kind or degree, I am at a loss to conceive how they can both consist harmoniously together.

In the time allotted to me I can not pursue the discussion as to the effect of this peculiar constitutional requirement for not a concurrent enforcement of a specific constitutional or statutory law but for concurrent legislation of Congress and the several States. I shall rather address myself to the drastic provisions of the enforcement act and to the unfair and unjustified prohibition of nonintoxicating beer and light wines. In placing the ban upon these beverages you go beyond the spirit, if not the letter, of the constitutional amendment. You will unnecessarily and unjustifiably deprive millions of well-behaved, orderly, decent people, whose sobriety and respect for law can not be truthfully assailed or questioned, from partaking of these beverages, to which they have been accustomed and which experience proves have been harmless and healthful and which myriads of high-standing physicians all over the land have testified are in hundreds of thousands of cases beneficial to the human system.

Under this bill you would deprive an accused in important cases of the right of trial by jury. The American people, ever since the foundation of the Republic, have regarded the right of jury trial as one of the great bulwarks for the preservation of liberty and a sure method of securing justice when accused of crime. Our boast as Americans has been that in criminal trials the accused has the right to be tried by a jury of his peers. It was the right guaranteed by Magna Charta; it has come to us reverenced through the centuries; it has been stoutly maintained as a precious prerogative of every man and woman within our land; and you now propose to seriously interfere with that cherished right which the lovers of American justice, through all the years of our national life, treasured as one of the paladiums of our liberties.

More than that, by this enforcement measure you seek to overturn the very wise and beneficent rule of law which places the burden of proof on the prosecution in all criminal and quasi-criminal cases, and substitute a vicious rule to compel the accused in certain cases to first establish his innocence before the prosecution proves his guilt. The bill in substance, in many of its provisions, overturns the safe and salutary rule that the prosecution must establish guilt beyond the reasonable doubt. In certain cases mentioned in the bill you provide for a reversal of that wholesome, salutary rule of law which declares that everyone is presumed to be innocent of crime until his guilt be established beyond a reasonable doubt. You would set aside the inflexible principles of law which the wisest minds of lawmakers and jurists have considered essential in the proper administration of justice, and substitute new rules which presume guilt in the first instance instead of innocence, which under the present law attends the accused throughout all stages of the prosecution. In some cases you, without good or sufficient reason, subject the accused to the exercise of the arbitrary will of a single judge, instead of resorting to the ordinary processes of law that have worked well for our communities to the present time.

More than that, this enforcement measure contains clauses which, in their last analysis and effect, discriminate between the rich and poor, the well-to-do and the humble, conferring on one class privileges which in a practical sense are denied to the other. So while one class can stock up liquor in the home the other class, of course, can not. You are doing this at a critical time, when there is so much unrest among the masses and so much discontent, which, while we seriously deplore and regret it, still, as a matter of fact, exists.

There are provisions in this enforcement measure opening the door to persecutions of those who may become victims of designing people working out their avarice, cupidity, or malice, as I shall endeavor to point out when we come to consider the bill for amendment.

This bill imposes an enormous burden of expenditures upon the general public, already overburdened with taxation in every form. It deprives the Government and States of enormous revenues, which of course must be made up out of the pockets of an overtaxed people. Consider, too, the provisions for the myriads of Government agents, clerks, spies, and employees of every kind required to carry on the work. What a wonderful and wide field there may be found for exploitation of some of these to hold down their jobs.

In some of the provisions there will be found a wide opportunity and the possibility of a profitable field for the extortioner for the operation and plying of his vile and nefarious profession. There are many other features of the bill that are highly objectionable, for instance, such as imposing liens without even the usual legal notice of suit or a public record being made of the lien. These unprecedented provisions will grievously affect and certainly seriously impair the interests and property rights of innocent real estate owners, especially in New York and other large cities. I will particularly point this out when amendments are in order. Under these provisions, if through malice or exploitation of persons, or even through some possible error, an action against an owner charged with having liquor on his property be commenced, there is no means or method under which he could rid his property of the lien, or secure a discharge of the lien through bond or other security until after trial of the case. In some jurisdictions this would be long after suit is brought—perhaps years—and so the owner is in danger of being hampered and would frequently be prevented from raising a loan on mortgage or in good faith conveying his property.

The power of public opinion is always essential to inspire and promote respect for law. A law that has not the moral support of the people behind it sooner or later falls into disuse, and then becomes an impotent instrument in the jurisdiction where the sentiment of the community is opposed to its enforcement. And these views apply to the character of this obnoxious legislation.

The Railroad Bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. FRANK L. GREENE, OF VERMONT,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, November 18, 1919,

On the bill (H. R. 10453) to provide for the termination of Federal control of railroads and systems of transportation; to provide for the settlement of disputes between carriers and their employees; to further amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended, and for other purposes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, granted by the House November 18, I submit the following correspondence regarding an interesting point of constitutional law involved in the original taking over of the railroads by the United States Railroad Administration:

ST. ALBANS, VT., June 14, 1918.

THE PRESIDENT.

SIR: A railway passage ticket or mileage, bought and paid for, is a contract as binding as any known to the law.

It entitles the purchaser not to a refund of his money but to transportation over the specified number of miles. Any court having jurisdiction will decree specific performance or award damages for breach, as may be claimed.

The Constitution forbids the States to pass any law impairing the obligations of this contract in specific terms.

While Congress is not in terms thus prohibited it has very seldom enacted laws that even incidentally could have such effect.

The emergency statute under which the Government has taken over control of the railroads neither in terms nor by implication suggests any purpose to invalidate existing contracts not inconsistent with such control.

Yet under cover of this law your deputy, the director general, has issued an order which is exactly the same in legal effect as the order of the German Government to invade Belgium, but without even the excuse of military or other necessity. The one contract is no better than the other.

To millions of Americans who may own these unused tickets it announces that their Government does not scruple to forcibly deprive them of their contract rights—not for public necessity, but for a very small money profit.

It places a stigma for all time on the credit of the railroads, for if these contracts may be ruthlessly treated as "scraps of paper" so may all others—for none can be made any more secure.

I am painfully at a loss to reconcile this with the platform of high ideals upon which you have taken your stand for our beloved country before the world—with your high regard for the rights of nations and persons under the law, as so often and so forcibly expressed.

With great respect,

STEPHEN E. ROYCE.

[United States Railroad Administration, W. G. McAdoo, Director General. Division of law: John Barton Payne, general counsel; R. Walton Moore, assistant general counsel.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 2, 1918.

STEPHEN E. ROYCE, Esq.,
Attorney at Law, St. Albans, Vt.

DEAR SIR: Your letter to the President of June 14 has been referred to the division of law of the United States Railroad Administration.

The act of March 21, being, as you point out, an emergency statute, its application necessarily has an emergency character. Those who dealt with the matter were convinced of the necessity of discontinuing the use of mileage, and they had no doubt that revenue and other considerations required that its use by the entire public should cease at one and the same time. Any other course would have invited the purchase of mileage books, for future use, just in advance of the new arrangement becoming effective. Nothing arbitrary or unfair was intended, and I need only cite such decisions as the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co. v. Mottley (219 U. S., 467), with respect to the legality of what has been done.

With much respect, I am,
Yours, very truly,

R. WALTON MOORE.

ST. ALBANS, VT., July 17, 1918.

Mr. R. WALTON MOORE,
Assistant General Counsel.

DEAR SIR: Referring to your favor of July 2. I am sorry you do not credit me with intelligence enough to discriminate between the case you cite and this one. However, I am not troubled about this, or about a very few unused mileage tickets (which I shall have framed rather than redeemed); nor presently interested in the question of the legality of this order or the power to issue or enforce it. The Germans have ample power, and law of their own make, to back everything they have done.

What concerns me is the question of right or wrong, and of the honor of my country.

A. The President said in his Fourth of July address that we are in this war "to the end that all promises and covenants may be sacredly observed, * * * no selfish injuries wrought with impunity, and a mutual trust established upon the handsome foundation of a mutual respect for right."

B. The President's deputy, in control of railroads taken over for the sole purpose of coordinating their operation for war purposes, issues an order repudiating hundreds of thousands of (passage and mileage tickets) small contracts, which certainly are "promises and covenants," if words mean anything, made by those railroads with their customers, the public—specific, unconditional, for full value received, guarded by the State laws, and immune from impairment by the States under the Federal Constitution.

C. The Prussian Government repudiated their contract to respect the neutrality of Belgian soil under a plea of "military necessity," which, from the Hun viewpoint that leaves honor and honesty out of the equation, is no doubt quite sound.

D. The American Government now repudiates these contracts with no conceivable plea of necessity, but simply for the purpose of forcing the holders of them to pay an additional fee before the goods they have already bought and paid for will be delivered to them. And this by order of an administrator acting under a statute which, so far as I can see, neither in terms, intent, nor scope authorizes or contemplates any such grave and ruthless assault upon common-law rights.

Now, if you can reconcile A and B and differentiate C and D, I shall be most grateful to you, for it is most unpleasant for a loyal American citizen, born and bred, to feel obliged to explain or excuse the acts of his Government—and be entirely at a loss how to do it; to see his country apparently following the barbarian lead in a vicious assault upon the very corner stone of civilization—the contract, and in professing one thing but doing the reverse.

But the explanation may not be by citation, plea of expediency, or excuse. Only facts and reasons that will stand the acid test of truth and logic will suffice to prove that one contract may be sacred and inviolate and another, in every legal and substantial respect the same, a mere "scrap of paper."

Do not, I beg you, regard this matter otherwise, or doubt that unless these questions can be and are answered squarely and satisfactorily, so as to justify that contract-repudiating order, or else the order made to conform to the President's plain words, it will come back to plague you sorely.

Only the other day a writer on Government activities said:

"We must have no place of authority in our national life for the inconsiderate and narrow man who would follow brutal practices in the handling of our businesses under the guise of war necessity. There is no reason why harsh treatment should prevail when kindlier and less destructive methods will secure the desired result."

An assault on the contract is an assault on civilization itself, for there is no other foundation for civilization to rest securely on.

"Truth knocketh softly at first, and yet again: but if the door be not presently opened, woe unto the door, and unto him that dwelleth within."

Very respectfully, yours,

STEPHEN E. ROYCE.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ISAAC SIEGEL,

OF NEW YORK,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, November 19, 1919.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, in the death of Col. Theodore Roosevelt last January the Nation lost one of its greatest leaders. It was therefore fitting that on October 27 last, his sixty-first birthday, that everywhere in our country orators and speakers paid their tributes to his memory and his extraordinary achievements in so many endeavors. In New York City, his birthplace, over 294,000 school children attended exercises in his honor, and everywhere the tribute of Speaker FREDERICK H. GILLETT was read and highly appreciated. It was printed in newspapers, and everywhere it brought forth the highest favorable and laudatory comment. It is fitting that it should be preserved for future generations, and I therefore insert it. The Speaker wrote as follows:

"No greater tribute can be paid to the memory of Col. Theodore Roosevelt than to say that, in practically every respect, he represented the American ideal.

"The story of our Nation's life makes it absolutely necessary that our ideal should have certain qualities. We have been a pioneer Nation, and our ideal must be a fearless man of rugged strength and tireless energy, with a physique enabling him to climb mountains, swim rivers, and cleave his way into the unknown through tangled wildernesses. He must also be a scholar, because in America complete and universal education is our goal. Next, he must be a leader who leads in order to serve. And, greater than these, he must be a lover in the truest sense of the word—a lover of family, of country, and of God. Careful study of the career of Mr. Roosevelt and analysis of his character show that in all four of these traits he approached perfection.

"When he was a boy he engaged in horseback riding, hunting, and other athletic sports. This gave him the foundation for his marvelous strength and his love for the 'great outdoors.' His exploits in the West and achievements upon the field of battle were those of a man of brawn and muscle, incapable of fatigue, immune to illness, and ignorant of fear. Throughout his life he was in constant quest of the unknown, bringing his career of exploration to a climax by adventurous work of lasting importance in South America. His physical courage and endurance seemed limitless, but did not surpass his moral courage.

"Never before have we found such a combination of powerful bodily traits and rare attainments in scholarship as Mr. Roosevelt displayed. The hunter became the author; the warrior became the orator and statesman. There was practically no subject upon which he was not informed. The nobles of Hungary were astounded by his knowledge of early Hungarian history. He was familiar with the classics and old Norse. His fund of information regarding birds and animals was unlimited. All that he read and heard he retained in his memory and, what is more, could use it when required.

"Theodore Roosevelt was destined to be a leader. He had such a magnetic personality that old and young flocked to his standard at his slightest call. At an early age he entered politics for the express purpose of serving the people. He allied himself with all movements for reform and fought consistently for what he considered right. In battle, in office, on the platform, and in the press he gave his contribution toward true and undefiled Americanism.

"His whole life was charged with an earnest sympathy for his fellow men, particularly the unfortunate and the humble, and a constant and unflagging effort to be of service to them. That, I think, was his noblest characteristic and left the deepest permanent impress on our history. His efforts and his example forced upon the attention of the Nation his theory that every man should have a fair chance in life. If that theory should be adopted and his spirit should become universal, most of our misery and crime would disappear.

"It was as a lover of home and of children, though, like Mr. Roosevelt wished to be remembered by posterity. Speaking of the publication of his letters to his children, he said, 'I would rather have this book published than anything that has ever been written about me.' Before his children were able to read he sent them what they called 'picture letters,' made up of rough drawings of the ideas he wished to convey. In the later ones we find descriptions of childish pranks, games, and romps, mingled with little stories of animal life. He tells of how he played hide and seek and other pastimes with his boys. Every child and grown person should read these letters, for no better insight into his real character can be found.

"History runs true to form in the sad coincidence that the man who was without doubt the most typically American of all Americans should have passed away just as his America reached the zenith of her glory as a world power. Moses, the typical Israelite, led his followers to the promised land, but was not allowed to enter. Julius Cæsar, the model Roman, formed a huge Mediterranean empire, which was not to be his to rule. Joan of Arc, who was the highest type of French womanhood, swept foreign control out of her land, only to be burned at the stake when her mission was accomplished. Abraham Lincoln, the representative American of his day, was stricken as soon as he had cemented together the Union which was torn by civil war. Theodore Roosevelt saw the country vindicate its best traditions and his teachings when pitted against foreign foes, but died before the triumphant return of our fighting forces and at a time when the United States of America was at the threshold of her position as arbiter for the world.

"The children of 1898 patterned themselves after Roosevelt. They wore his 'Rough Rider' uniform and acted out in their games what they read of his deeds. His great love for children had its recompense in the love that the children of America had and have for him. To them and to their elders he was the American ideal. And when his achievements, which at this period seem still current events, shall pass into history, no pages of the annals of our country will be brighter than those recording the work of Theodore Roosevelt."

Homes for Our Service Men.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. DICK T. MORGAN,

OF OKLAHOMA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, November 19, 1919.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, on the 11th day of June, 1919, I introduced H. R. 5545, entitled "A bill to provide homes for soldiers, seamen, marines, and for other purposes." The great majority of the Members of the House are no doubt familiar with the general features of this bill. It may not be out of place, however, to again present an outline of the proposed measure.

The chief provisions of H. R. 5545 may be summarized as follows:

The administration of the bill is placed under the general supervision of the Secretary of the Interior.

It creates a Government corporation to be known as the Soldiers' and Seamen's Federal Home Founding Corporation. The Secretary of the Interior and four other persons, to be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, are to be the directors and managers of the corporation.

The capital stock of the corporation is to be $100,000,000, all of which is to be subscribed by the United States of America.

A county board is provided, consisting of three persons, namely, the postmaster of the county seat of each county, the county agent of the Department of Agriculture of each county, and one other person appointed by the corporation. An additional board is provided in cities having 20,000 or more population.

The soldiers and seamen are to be provided with homes through a system of loans made by the corporation.

Two kinds of loans are provided for—long-term loans to run for a period of not less than 5 years nor for more than 60 years, and short-term loans to run for a period of not exceeding 5 years.

Every honorably discharged soldier, seaman, and marine is entitled to obtain a loan of not more than $4,000, with which to purchase a farm homestead or a home in a town or city. Loans are to be made up to the full value of the homestead. Short-term loans not exceeding $1,200 are authorized to enable the purchasers of farm homesteads to supply themselves with the proper live stock and farm equipment. Short-term loans are to be made up to the full appraised value of the live stock and equipment purchased.

The $100,000,000 capital provided is made a revolving fund to enable the corporation to conduct its business. To obtain additional capital, the corporation is authorized to issue long-term bonds in an amount not in excess of the total amount of mortgages held on urban or farm homesteads. Short-term bonds are authorized to be issued in an amount not exceeding the loans and chattel mortgages held for short-term loans. To insure the sale of these bonds in large quantities and at a low rate of interest, the Government guarantees the payment when due of both the principal and interest of the bonds. The bonds are made exempt from taxation.

In view of the fact that loans are authorized up to the full appraised value of the property mortgaged, it must be assumed that there will be some losses to the corporation. To provide against such losses a guaranty fund is created. The interest charged on the long-term loans is to be one-half of 1 per cent per annum higher than the interest rate on the bonds, and the interest on the short-term loans is to be 1 per cent annually higher than the interest on short-term bonds. The one-half of 1 per cent on long-term loans and the 1 per cent on short-term loans is to be set aside as a separate fund to make good any losses which the corporation may incur. In addition to this, the corporation will have the entire interest received on its capital of $100,000,000 to apply on any losses it may sustain. The payments into the guaranty fund and the annual interest on the endowment capital of $100,000,000 will far exceed any possible losses the corporation will sustain.

The corporation is authorized to use 25 per cent of its capital as a revolving fund in the purchase of land to be subdivided into farm homesteads of not less than 10 nor more than 40 acres, and land within or adjacent to any town or city to be subdivided, platted, and sold as urban homesteads.

Soldiers, seamen, and marines are authorized to make entry of any public lands without the payment of fees or commissions.

The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to reserve from entry for a period of two years any public lands, during which time soldiers will have the preference right to enter land so reserved.

The corporation is further authorized, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, to use any part of the public domain to provide homes under the provision of the act, and any soldier making entry of public lands shall be entitled to secure a short-term loan not exceeding $1,200 to provide the necessary live stock and farm equipment for the operation of the farm.

WHAT THE SOLDIERS SAY.

Under leave granted by me to extend my remarks, I propose to make somewhat extended quotations from the resolutions which have been adopted by the national convention of the American Legion, by various State branches of the American Legion, and local posts of the organization. I shall also print excerpts from a portion of the large number of letters I have received from soldiers, seamen, and marines who served in our Army and Navy during the great World War. The subject is one of very great importance not only to the beneficiaries of the proposed legislation but also to the Nation. Certainly it will be instructive to the Senators and Representatives in Congress, as well as the public generally, to read what our service men themselves think of the proposed legislation.

RESOLUTION OF NATIONAL CONVENTION OF THE AMERICAN LEGION.

The bill, H. R. 5545, has been received with great favor by the soldiers, sailors, and marines of the great World War. This is shown by the hearty indorsement they have given it. These indorsements have come from all sections of the country, from individuals, local posts, and State organizations of the American Legion, and finally by a resolution passed by the national convention of the American Legion which met at Minneapolis November 11, 1919. This resolution was general in its terms, but it specifically requests the immediate enactment of a law to be known as the "American Legion home founding act," embodying direct loans to ex-service persons for the purchase and development of farms and for the purchase of city homes. That this resolution met with the enthusiastic approval of the delegates to the convention is shown by the fact that it was received with loud cheers when read before the convention. The incident is described by John H. Dunnewind, staff correspondent of the Detroit Free Press, as appears in the issue of this paper November 13, 1919. The correspondent, in referring to the resolutions reported by the committee on beneficial legislation, says:

The major portion of the report on beneficial legislation was given over to recommendations for provision for wounded and disabled soldiers. The most important section, however, demands Government aid in building homes in both country and city. When this section was read, loud cheering followed.

ARKANSAS.

The State convention of the Arkansas Branch of the American Legion passed a resolution indorsing H. R. 5545, as is shown by a letter from Mr. Roy W. Wood, of Little Rock, in which he says:

It may be of interest to you to know, in the event you have not already been advised, that the Arkansas Branch of the American Legion at its State convention, October 8 and 9, unanimously adopted a resolution favoring the "Morgan bill," and further urged the Arkansas delegation in Congress to lend their support to the measure. I am quite sure that when this matter comes before the national convention, in Minneapolis, that the Arkansas delegates will not only vote for but will work for an indorsement of your bill.

Because of its simplicity, freedom from red tape, and the fact that it gives the discharged soldier in the cities the same benefits as those in the rural sections leads me to express the strong hope that your bill takes precedent over all other proposed measures for recognition of honorable military and naval service.

Mr. Tom Poe, of Little Rock, in a letter dated November 1, 1919, referring to H. R. 5545, says:

I introduced the resolution in the convention of the American Legion, Arkansas Branch, indorsing your bill. I think it the best bill of its kind that has been offered.

Mr. Neill Reed, of Heber Springs, Ark., under date of October 31, 1919, writing of the action of the American Legion post at that place says:

Your proposed bill was indorsed to the man and a resolution was passed to such effect with a request to myself to notify you of such resolution. Speaking for the post as a whole, it is their earnest hopes and desires that you meet with encouragement and success in such an earnest endeavor.

COLORADO.

The State executive committee of the Colorado Branch of the American Legion indorsed H. R. 5545, as shown by a letter from Maj. H. A. Saidy, of Colorado Springs, under date of July 14, 1919, in which he says:

I have read your bill, H. R. 5545, and your speech on "Homes for soldiers," very carefully, and am very much pleased to say that, in my opinion, the plan you have outlined will be a very good one, and one that will please every returned soldier. At a meeting of the executive committee of the American Legion, of Colorado, your bill was unanimously indorsed. We are sending our resolution to the national organization of the American Legion.

DELAWARE.

The State convention of the Delaware Branch of the American Legion indorsed H. R. 5545, which is shown by a letter dated October 31, 1919, from State Adjt. C. M. Dillon, in which he says:

The first State convention of the American Legion, in session in this city on October 23, unanimously adopted the following resolution:

"Whereas the American Legion has been asked for an expression of opinion as to the better of numerous bills now pending in Congress in reference to financing homes for soldiers: And therefore be it

"Resolved, That the Delaware State convention of the American Legion indorse and recommend the passage of the Dick T. Morgan bill, known as H. R. 5545, and that we request our Representatives in Congress to support this measure."

IDAHO.

The executive committee of the St. Anthony Post No. 22, American Legion, St. Anthony, Idaho, indorsed H. R. 5545 by resolution, as follows:

It appearing that H. R. 5545, introduced in the House June 11, 1919, entitled "A bill to provide homes for soldiers, seamen, and marines, and for other purposes," by Hon. DICK T. MORGAN, Representative from Oklahoma, is a fair and just measure, and one which will benefit the larger majority of ex-service men: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we inform the Senators and Representatives from this State of our approval of this bill and ask them to lend their assistance to its final passage with a view of its becoming a law.

Mr. Curtis Bland, Preston, Idaho, under date of November 11, 1919, says:

I wish to say that as post commander I speak for more than 300 ex-service men in the county, and we are all for your bill H. R. 5545. Your effort to get this bill enacted into law is to be commended, and we are all back of you and pledge our support. Inclosed find copy of resolutions to that effect.

Following is the resolution referred to by Mr. Bland:

Whereas there is now pending before the Congress of the United States a bill commonly known as the Morgan bill; and

Whereas said bill has for its purpose the financing of soldiers, sailors, and marines, to enable them to procure either farms or city homes: Therefore be it

Resolved by Preston Post, No. 34, Idaho Branch American Legion, That we urge the Congress of the United States to enact into law the said Morgan bill.

Mr. Mark A. Shields, Boise, Idaho, under date of July 21, says:

Because of the interest I know exists among the former service men on the subject of your talk June 16, I wish to indorse, heartily and without reservation, every clause contained in H. R. 5545 and your talk in behalf of it at the time it was introduced.

CONNECTICUT.

Mr. James B. Moody, jr., State chairman of the Connecticut Branch of the American Legion, in a letter dated July 5, 1919, referring to H. R. 5545, says:

I judge from careful reading of your bill H. R. 5545 that you have devoted thorough study to impending needs of former service men in the establishment through our Government of a law which would make those of them who are dependent and need help reasonably independent, and result in there existing in our good country better manhood, better citizenship, and undying love for the flag for which these men fought.

By far yours is the best of its kind of the several bills presented to Congress, in my personal opinion, and will, I trust, receive speedy and favorable action by both branches of Congress.

FLORIDA.

The Sarasota Bay Post, No. 30, American Legion, as shown by a letter, under date of November 3, from Post Commander A. L. Joiner, passed the following resolution:

It having been brought to the attention of this post that the Hon. DICK T. MORGAN, Member of Congress from Oklahoma, had introduced a bill (H. R. 5545) to provide homes for soldiers, seamen, and marines before the House of Representatives: Therefore be it Resolved, That this post, through its proper officers, notify the Hon. DICK T. MORGAN, Member of Congress, of their appreciation of his efforts in the behalf of the "all-wars service man," and that this post is unanimously in favor of House bill 5545.

Walter S. McQuade, of Miami, Fla., under date of August 18, in a letter, says:

May it be God's will that your bill (H. R. 5545) go through both House and Senate and receive the official signature of the President and seal of our Government.

J. J. McGee, Jacksonville, Fla., under date of August 19, 1919, in a letter, says:

To my mind this bill would be the most helpful to the men who have served in the World War and were fortunate enough to return with their lives of any yet introduced.

Dr. Eustace Lang, of Madison, Fla., under date of August 19, 1919, in a letter, says:

Any measure enacted by Congress in recognition of services of our soldiers will have to be capable of universal application to be satisfactory, and to be of the greatest benefit to the ex-soldier and the Nation it must be of a nature that will best aid the soldier to help himself. Such a measure your bill appears to be.

Dr. Frank E. McClane, of Marianna, Fla., under date of August 22, in a letter, says:

My true wish to you is that your bill may pass both Houses in its entirety, which would alone place you in an enviable position in the hearts of our boys and other people.

F. E. Hunt, adjutant, John J. Pershing Camp, No. 10, United Spanish War Veterans, of Miami, Fla., in a letter, says:

John J. Pershing Camp, No. 10, of United Spanish War Veterans, at Miami, Fla., desires to thank you very much for your expression and interest as manifested in House bill 5545, and we assure you of our support and will be glad to help you furthering same.

ILLINOIS.

Mr. Charles L. Makemson, attorney, Chicago, Ill., under date of August 8, 1919, in a letter, says:

On behalf of the Austin Post of the American Legion, of Illinois, I wish to thank you for the interest taken by you in the welfare of the American soldiers of the Great War in introducing in Congress the bill providing for homes for soldiers.

The Austin Post of the American Legion, by a letter, under date of August 8, 1919, passed the following resolution:

Whereas Austin Post of the American Legion believes that said bill (H. R. 5545) should be passed by the Congress of the United States within the shortest possible time, and hereby thoroughly indorses and approves the said bill.

Mr. E. Moon Probert, Chicago, Ill., says:

I am pleased to advise you that the Hyde Park Post of the American Legion of this city, at a meeting held last evening, indorsed your bill whereby ex-service men might secure loans from the Government to build homes.

Individual indorsements.

Benj. Havlik, Chicago, Ill., referring to the high rent he has to pay and the difficulties with which he has to contend, says:

All this, however, will be cleared when your bill passes, and it will bring happiness to many thousand American homes.

John Frederick, Cicero, Ill., says:

It is my earnest desire to purchase or build a home suitable for myself, but the trouble is I haven't anything to start with, and therefore must abandon any such hope unless your co-Representatives consider your praiseworthy bill same as you do.

Mr. Martin Anderson, Peoria, Ill., says:

While no one bill before Congress would satisfy all ex-service men, and I believe several should be incorporated into one so as to give a choice of one or the other, if anything is done at all, for one I would say if the Government backed me in the building of a home, I would be the most grateful citizen in the great United States.

INDIANA.

The State executive committee of the Indiana Branch of the American Legion passed the following resolution:

Whereas there is now pending in the House of Representatives a bill introduced by Representative MORGAN, Oklahoma (H. R. 5545), which has for its object the recognition of honorable military and naval service by creating a large fund to be known as the home fund of which soldiers, sailors, and marines may procure for the purchase of homes either in cities, towns, or on farms: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we, the executive committee of the Indiana Branch of the American Legion, do hereby indorse and approve said bill or one in which the same principles are incorporated.

The Indiana State convention of the American Legion also indorsed the bill, as shown from a letter of Mr. L. Russell Newgent, secretary, under date of November 1, in which he says:

The men in the State are mostly in favor of your bill, with the exception of a few who are in favor of a bonus. The State convention adopted a resolution asking for the passage of a bill which would give the soldier his choice between the bonus and a long-term loan similar to that outlined in your bill.

Mr. Floyd R. Murray, Hammond, Ind., says:

I am writing you as president of the local post of the American Legion. We wish to express our appreciation and commendation of the bill which you have introduced in the House providing the Government funds from which returned soldiers may borrow $4,000 for home-building purposes.

Mr. Harry E. Wells, Madison, Ind., says:

Representing some 700 returned soldiers of this county, I, as secretary of Jefferson County Post No. 1, of Indiana Branch, American Legion, upon their suggestion, am writing you to express their appreciation of your efforts to get your bill through allowing soldiers to borrow money from the Government as outlined in the inclosed article. Your plan is right, and we are with you.

Mr. L. Russell Newgent, Indianapolis, Ind., says:

I made a careful examination of your bill, and in my judgment it is far ahead of anything that has been offered by anyone in behalf of the soldiers of the late war. I see no reason why the great number of men in the cities and towns should not be taken care of just the same as those on the farm.

Mr. Augustus B. Wilson, Indianapolis, Ind., says:

I have read with great interest your bill, H. R. 5545, which I sincerely hope will be passed at this session of Congress.

As a returned World War veteran, having seen service in France, I most heartily indorse your bill, which will give material aid to the returned fighting men and show them that the United States has not forgotten them now that the war is over.

Mr. Mark H. Thomas, former captain, Quartermaster Corps, American Expeditionary Forces, Huntington, Ind., says:

I wish to commend this act in principle, and I sincerely hope that it passes the Congress in something like its present form.

As a former soldier of the late war, I will say that I believe the great mass of former service men will back a bill drawn along the lines of your measure.

IOWA.

The State convention of the Iowa Branch of the American Legion adopted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Iowa Branch of the American Legion, in State convention assembled, respectfully ask that Congress pass the Morgan bill as legislation directed to aid the service men.

American Legion posts.

The Davenport Post, No. 26, of the American Legion, under date of November 5, passed the following resolution:

Whereas there is now before the United States Congress a bill known as the Morgan bill, H. R. 5545, which, if it becomes a law, would authorize the Government to loan honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines a reasonable amount of money at the rate of 3½ per cent interest with which to build them a home: Therefore be it

Resolved by Davenport Post, No. 26, of the American Legion, city of Davenport, State of Iowa (representing the ex-service men of Scott County, Iowa), That said post does heartily approve of the above bill or of the other bills which will authorize the Government to loan ex-service men money with which to build homes at a reasonable rate of interest.

The Sedan Post, No. 93, American Legion, Iowa Branch, Adair, Iowa, passed the following resolution:

Whereas there is a bill before Congress known as the Morgan bill: Be it

Resolved, That Sedan Post, No. 93, Iowa Branch of the American Legion, assembled in regular meeting on this 3d day of November, 1919, at Adair, Iowa, respectfully asks that Congress pass the Morgan bill as legislation directed to aid the service men.

Individual indorsements.

Mr. Orville W. Harris, Jefferson, Iowa, says:

A copy of the proposed bill, soldiers and seamen's Federal home-founding act, has just come to my attention. I wish to say that it is the best thing that has thus far been proposed, and it has the hearty indorsement of the discharged soldiers of this community.

Mr. A. Ray Lauer, Creston, Iowa, says:

As a returned soldier, I wish to express my hearty thanks to you for the introduction of the soldiers and sailors' Federal home-founding act.

It seems to meet the approval of all the ex-service men with whom I have come in contact.

KANSAS.

Mr. Arthur J. Luckey, State chaplain, American Legion, Manhattan, Kans., says:

I have looked through your speech on financing homes for soldiers, delivered in support of your bill on that subject. I think that you have a very good, practical plan for assisting the soldiers of the recent war in a way that will be beneficial to them and to the country. What we need for the stability and safety of society is more homes.

Mr. Leonard G. Fort, Emporia, Kans., says:

As an ex-service man and a member of the American Legion, I wish to thank you for your efforts in the House in promoting our interests.

Your bill, H. R. 5545, I believe to be a better policy than any cash-bonus bill. The spirit of home building, I believe, will tend greatly to Americanization.

Mr. Oscar F. Sturn, Parsons, Kans., says:

I have seen your bill, H. R. 5545, which you introduced in Congress June 11, 1919. I am much interested and hope that your bill may pass. There are many soldiers who would be glad of such an opportunity to get a home or farm. I live in the city and have a good position but no home, and with the help of such as your bill provides one could soon own his own home.

LOUISIANA.

Mr. Richard A. Uhalt, New Orleans, La., says:

Your kind favor of the 24th instant to hand, and very glad to receive a copy of the bill H. R. 5545. I have carefully examined same and find it perfect in every respect.

Say, that is a real, true American bill, and should go through like a shot. Those are all my sentiments.

There came to my notice of your passing a bill for the helping of the boys. Say, that is fine. I wish to say I can assure the Government that this plan of yours can be worked out successfully, and the Government will not be out one cent.

MARYLAND.

Mr. R. A. Nusbaum, R. F. D. No. 1, Union Bridge, Md., says:

I am in touch with about a hundred of the boys in this part of the country, and we all like the features of your bill so much better than the Lane-Mondell reclamation bill. Do all you can to get support for your bill and pass it.

MASSACHUSETTS.

American Legion posts.

Mr. Leon P. Lincoln, vice commander Barre Post, No. 2, American Legion, Barre, Mass., in a letter, says:

I am pleased to inform you that our post adopted resolutions in September favoring the passage of bill H. R. 5545, and sent copies of the same to our Representatives, to the Department of the Interior, and to the Massachusetts State Branch, American Legion, and to our delegates to the national convention of the American Legion.

I assure you that as a post we are heartily in favor of this bill in preference to any other bill that has been proposed relative to the establishment of farms or homes for service men. We believe that it is a bill which will give the greatest benefit to the greatest number of service men, and at the same time can be carried out with a much smaller appropriation than the other bills proposed.

Mr. Sylvio H. Moineau, adjutant, Herbert Akroyd Post, No. 132, American Legion, Marlboro, Mass., in a letter of November 17, says:

Yours relative to H. R. 5545 received and action taken thereon. First, allow me to thank you both for Post No. 132 and myself for the framing and fostering of a bill that will mean so much to the ex-service man of small means. This post has voted to indorse your bill and communicate with our Representatives in Congress asking their support of the bill. Our delegate from this post to the national convention was urged to work for H. R. 5545.

MINNESOTA.

American Legion posts.

The Axel Buseth Post, No. 18, American Legion, Henning, Minn., in a letter under date of October 24 stated as follows:

Whereas the Hon. DICK T. MORGAN, of Oklahoma, in the House of Representatives of the United States has introduced a bill (H. R. 5545) which provides for a constructive program calculated to be permanently useful, helpful, and beneficial to all honorably discharged service men without distinction by offering to all such honorably discharged service men the privilege of home ownership:

We, the members of the Axel Buseth Post, No. 18, the American Legion, assembled at a regular meeting at the headquarters at Henning, Minn., October 6, 1919, fully cognizant of the soundness of the measure, do indorse said bill, H. R. 5545, and urge its speedy enactment into law.

Individual indorsements.

Mr. R. Forest McConnell, St. Peter Free Press, St. Peter, Minn., says:

Dr. I. C. Edwards, Breckenridge, Minn., says:

I have read and reread your bill and two speeches regarding the financing homes for soldiers. I heartily indorse it, and so does every returned soldier and sailor and marine which I have interviewed on the matter.

Mr. E. W. Melster, adjutant, William R. Witty Post, No. 37, St. Peter, Minn., says:

Personally I am very much in favor of this bill, and as this post is fortunate in having two members as national delegates to the Minneapolis Convention, I feel certain it will have a very good support should it come before one of the business sessions.

Mr. W. Wallace Munger, Excelsior, Minn., in a letter, says:

I appreciate your method of arranging for soldiers. Not gifts of money or land where they could not live if they would, but a good substantial life toward a home of their own in the community in which they choose to live is the desire of the greatest number of soldiers. You are on the right track absolutely, and Godspeed.

Mr. Al H. Sidwell, Ribbinsdale, Minn., in a letter says:

You sent me a copy of your bill, H. R. 5545, and I want to again express my hearty approval and also that all I have shown it to have been very enthusiastic about it.

MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. Edward L. Willett, Yazoo City, Miss., says:

I shall take the greatest pleasure in writing our Representatives asking them to support your bill. I wish to advise having written Hon. J. W. COLLIER and Hon. BENJAMIN G. HUMPHREYS, asking them to cooperate with you in getting H. R. 5545 passed.

MONTANA.

Mr. H. T. Simms, Deer Lodge, Mont., writes of action taken by Powell Post, No. 10, American Legion, Deer Lodge, Mont., as follows:

I am pleased to state that Powell Post, No. 10, has unanimously indorsed your bill H. R. 5545. I have not heard a dissenting voice, and have had the bill published in full in our local paper.

Mr. Martin G. Read, Choteau, Mont., referring to action taken by Choteau Post, No. 6, of the American Legion, Choteau, Mont., says:

At their last regular meeting, November 4, 1919, Choteau Post, No. 6, the American Legion, voted its unanimous support of your bill "to provide homes for soldiers, sailors, and marines."

NEBRASKA.

The State convention of the American Legion of Nebraska, which met October 11, 1919, passed the following resolution:

Whereas a bill to provide homes for our soldiers, sailors, and marines, known as the Morgan bill, has been introduced in the House of Representatives; and

Individual indorsements.

Mr. Robert G. Fuhrman, chairman the American Legion, Pender, Nebr., with reference to H. R. 5545, says:

Believe me, we are highly enthusiastic here over this legislation, and consider it the best yet, and assure you that you have our complete support in securing its passage.

Mr. Charles H. Epperson, jr., Clay Center, Nebr., under date of November 3, 1919, says:

At the State convention we declared ourselves in favor of your bill, singling it out as the best of the many before Congress.

Mr. L. E. Luttrell, Omaha, Nebr., under date of August 16, 1919, with reference to H. R. 5545, says:

I strongly believe that your bill will serve better a greater body of men than any of the other bills, and I trust that my letter will serve as a vote toward the support of your bill before Congress. As a former soldier of the World War, I think your bill correct.

Mr. W. S. McEachron, Omaha, Nebr., under date of September 6, referring to H. R. 5545, says:

In my opinion the great benefit to be derived from this bill is to the country at large. No one thing will do more to down Bolshevism and I. W. W.ism than a country of home owners. You never see a home owner waving the red flag, and with about two or three million new home owners scattered over the United States the strongest possible bulwark will be provided for our country's peace and prosperity.

The Henry J. Leclerc Post, No. 13, the American Legion, Greenville, N. H., passed the following resolution relative to H. R. 5545:

Mr. Edward F. Weston, Newark, N. J., under date of November 7, 1919, writes relative to H. R. 5545, as follows:

I wish to congratulate you on the measure, and wish you success in your endeavors to have it enacted into law.

As president of the Warwick Post, American Legion of New York City, I am instructed by the members thereof to inform you that at its last meeting on November 6, 1919, a resolution was adopted giving its approval to the proposed bill, H. R. 5545, initiated by you.

Mr. Earl C. Hitchcock, Warrensburg Post, American Legion, Warrensburg, N. Y., in a letter, says:

It is with great pleasure that I inform you that Warrensburg Post No. 446, of the American Legion, heartily indorses your bill to provide homes for former service men of all wars of the United States.

Mr. C. D. Neattice, secretary Post No. 248, Middleburg, N. Y., says:

At a special meeting of the Timothy Murphy Post of the American Legion, this post went on record heartily indorsing your bill, H. R. 5545, to provide homes for veterans.

Mr. Fred Kellerhouse, secretary Shekomeko Post, Pine Plains N. Y., writes as follows:

At the last meeting of the Shekomeko Post a vote was passed indorsing your bill.

Individual indorsements.

Mr. M. J. Ostrander, the Corse Press, Sandy Creek, N. Y., says:

Yours of October 25, together with a copy of your speech delivered to the House of Representatives, together with a copy of your bill, H. R. 5545, is before me, and has my most hearty approval, as it would prove a lasting benefit to a great number of deserving soldiers.

Mr. A. C. Finelite, 150 Nassau Street, New York City, says:

I am heartily in favor of the adoption of the bill, and would like to see it a law.

Mr. John J. Haggerty, department of excise, Albany, N. Y., says:

The bill appeals to me as being the greatest advance yet made in legislation affecting such veterans, as it places no premium upon patriotism, but rather offers an opportunity as a recompense for sacrifices made from patriotic motives.

Mr. John C. Duffy, 302 West Seventy-seventh Street, New York City, says:

As a soldier of the World War, allow me to thank you for your bill to help the ex-service men by loaning them money at a low rate of interest to buy their own homes. You are certainly the best friend of the veterans in the House of Representatives, and we will never forget your kindness.

John J. Nolan, 169 Elk Street, Albany, N. Y., in a letter, says:

I am a young married man, recently discharged, and my ambition is to own my own home, and I believe your bill is an excellent one, and I sincerely hope that it is given favorable consideration. It will benefit thousands of us boys who do not care to take up farming by giving us a start in life. It is the least the Government can do.

Mr. George L. Peterling, 152 Sherman Avenue, New York City, in a letter, says:

From my personal experience, such a plan would prove of the utmost benefit to all service men desirous of owning something besides a rent receipt, but who unfortunately, are not equipped with the necessary knowledge of farm management to promote and render such an enterprise successful.

Mr. Tony Mazzeo, 127 West Ninety-eighth Street, New York City, in a letter, says:

I am taking the pleasure of writing a few lines to let you know that I appreciate the bill you are to present and glad you are one to think of us boys.

Mr. William H. Wilson, 2581 Eighth Avenue, New York City, says:

Mighty interested in looking forward to the success of this measure, and sure do wish you oceans of good luck in "putting this over."

Mr. Neil A. Strand, 415 Sixtieth Street, Brooklyn, N. Y., says:

I for one would like to see your bill pass the House, because I expect to get married some day and would like to live in my own home.

It seems to me your bill is the best one advanced so far for the veterans of the World War.

Mr. Wauhope Lynn, 146 Grand Street, New York City, says:

Your proposed bill for home building and ownership is the whole story to solve present discontent. The home is the only altar that man or woman worship at without trouble in their hearts.

OKLAHOMA.

The Oklahoma State Convention of the American Legion, which met at Oklahoma City, October 21, 1919, passed the following resolution in regard to H. R. 5545:

Resolved, That the American Legion of the State of Oklahoma unqualifiedly indorse the bill H. R. 5545, now pending in Congress, for the relief and benefit of all honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines, as being the fairest and best bill now in their interest introduced, and request Congress to pass said bill in the form in which it has been introduced. Said bill does not give the soldier anything, but loans him money at a small rate of interest, which he can pay back, for the purpose of acquiring a home either in the city or the country, thereby permitting the soldier to maintain his self-respect.

Mr. Hugh P. Haugherty, commander, eighth congressional district, Oklahoma American Legion, informs as follows:

At a meeting of the State executive committee at Oklahoma City on last Monday we adopted the slogan, "A home for every soldier," and we will try to get it, and think your bill is the proper way to accomplish that end.

Local posts.

At a special meeting of Argonne Post, No. 4, American Legion, held at Enid, Okla., on July 2, 1919, the following resolution with reference to H. R. 5545 was adopted:

Whereas the Hon. DICK T. MORGAN, a Member of the House of Representatives from the eighth district of Oklahoma, has introduced into Congress H. R. 5545, on June 11, 1919, the same being an act entitled "A bill to provide homes for soldiers, seamen, and marines, and for other purposes": Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Argonne Post, No. 4, State of Oklahoma, unqualifiedly indorse and request the passage of the said act by the Congress of the United States, the said act, in the judgment of the Argonne Post, No. 4, State of Oklahoma, more fully meeting the justness to the individual soldier, seaman, and marine than any other bill pending in Congress of the United States known at this time.

It is believed that this bill will meet with absolute approval of all soldiers, seamen, and marines of the late emergency.

Mr. R. B. Butts, Muskogee, Okla., writes as follows of the action taken by the James F. Smith Post, of the American Legion at Muskogee, Okla.:

R. 5545, I have received a large number of letters from every section of the State strongly indorsing the measure and urgently requesting Congress to take favorable action in regard to same.

OREGON.

The Carl B. Fenton Post, No. 20, of the Oregon State Branch of the American Legion, passed the following resolution:

Whereas a bill entitled "The soldiers' and seamen's Federal home-founding act," House bill No. 5545, introduced on June 11, 1919, by the Hon. DICK T. MORGAN, of Oklahoma, is the one measure whose provisions are of such character as to be generally available to all ex-service people for the obtaining of homes on terms which are at once businesslike and liberal: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Carl B. Fenton Post, No. 20, of the Oregon State Branch of the American Legion, That we indorse and recommend for passage H. R. 5545, introduced in the House of Representatives of the United States on June 11, 1919, by the Hon. DICK T. Mr. Harold F. Jones, Providence, R. I., under date of October 12, 1919, with reference to House bill 5545, says:

Your conception of the soldier and sailor idea of home rings true to both my buddies' and my own heart, and your hearty cooperation to push this bill through Congress to aid us men who took an active part in the war at this low rate of interest will do more to counteract all the evils of Bolshevism and I. W. W.ism and all the other present evils than all the soap-box and four-minute speeches that can be thought of and carried out.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

The South Dakota branch of the American Legion, as outlined in a letter received from the State secretary, M. C. J. Harris, took the following action in regard to House bill 5545:

At the recent State convention of the American Legion of South Dakota your bill, H. R. 5545, was presented and given considerable discussion. It was the sense of the convention that this bill extends proper rights and privileges to the soldier, sailor, and marines as a body. I was instructed to inform you that in your efforts to secure the passage of this bill you will have the hearty support of the American Legion of this State.

Individual indorsements.

Mr. Theodore R. Johnson, Sioux Falls, S. Dak., says:

Your speech on "Home for Soldiers" has been carefully digested. Personally I believe your plan one that should merit consideration. It sounds feasible, is uniform, reaches all, and on its face has no patent defects.

Mr. E. B. Moles, Wessington Springs, S. Dak., says:

I have mentioned these to a number of ex-service men who have been giving these matters some serious consideration, and I find without a single exception that your plan meets with the most favor of any we have heard of so far.

Please accept my thanks, sir, for your efforts in our behalf. Whether the bill passes or not, we will always feel indebted to you for this work.

TENNESSEE.

Mr. F. E. Hagler, internal-revenue agent, Nashville, Tenn., in a letter under date of July 29, said:

Speaking as a discharged soldier, I want to thank you for the bill you have introduced providing for Federal assistance to discharged service men in purchasing a home or a farm.

Of all the plans for this purpose that have come to my notice, yours is the only one that is based on a common-sense understanding of the men's need. The enactment of your bill into a law will do a great good.

Mr. E. W. Stanfield, Memphis, Tenn., in a letter, says:

Have been keeping up with, and greatly interested in, your bill to aid discharged soldiers. Do sincerely hope that this bill may go through and that I might be one of the very first to obtain the loan, so that I can buy and work the neat little farm I have so long wanted in Santa Margarita Colony, Calif.

Mr. N. L. Knoph, Knoxville, Tenn., in a letter, says:

May I not express my appreciation of the bill recently introduced by you to assist the ex-service men to purchase homes? I for one sincerely appreciate your efforts in behalf of the returned soldier and trust that your bill will meet with the speedy approval of both Houses.

TEXAS.

Mr. M. A. Hopson, Eastland, Tex., in a letter, says:

I have just read in the daily papers the outline of your bill to grant aid to soldiers. I wish to say that yours is the first bill that meets my full indorsement.

Mr. Rider M. Johnson, box 227, Nacogdoches, Tex., says:

As I was a soldier in the United States Army during the late war and was in France, I wish to express to you my very sincere thanks for your effort in behalf of the boys, with respect to your effort to aid them in the acquirement of homes and farms. Your bill is the very best that I have heard of up to the present time, and I think that it would be very difficult to improve upon the same, as it is thoroughly sound, both from a financial and from a patriotic point of view.

Of all that has been done or that has been offered to Congress, in my opinion, your bill, H. R. 5545, is by far the best, most comprehensive, complete, and most satisfactory, and I very sincerely trust that you may succeed in your most worthy and laudable undertaking.

Mr. Phil E. Baer, Paris, Tex., in a letter, says:

I have yours of July 3, together with copy of your speech on homes for soldiers. I do not know of a word that I could add; the plan is all right, and I am with you and for it.

Mr. Lindsey Blayney (lieutenant colonel, Infantry, in late war), Houston, Tex., in a letter under date of November 4, says:

Permit me to congratulate you upon your excellent bill, H. R. 5545. Thousands of excellent men who would scorn a gift would gladly take advantage of its terms. It is morally and economically just and fair.

WASHINGTON.

A resolution was passed by the Washington State convention of the American Legion favoring passage of my bill. This is outlined in a letter received from Mr. Nissim Abrahamson, Hoquiam, Wash., which says as follows:

Some time ago our post passed a resolution favoring the passage of your bill and forwarded a copy of same to the entire Washington congressional delegation, and have to date received a number of replies from our Senators and Congressmen promising favorable consideration.

This matter was also brought up on the floor at the Washington State convention of the American Legion, and a resolution passed favoring passage of same. (Oct. 10, 1919.)

American Legion posts.

Mr. J. Wallace Hewetson, Chewelah, Wash., in a letter under date of October 21, says:

Our local post of the American Legion at a meeting on October 17 enthusiastically indorsed the Morgan bill now before Congress. We extend to you our gratitude for your efforts on our behalf. The men feel they can get a home instead of being made tramps.

Mr. Arthur D. Mason, Prosser, Wash., in a letter, says:

Will say in regard to the bill which you have introduced our local post has passed resolutions favoring your bill.

Mr. Spencer S. Sulliger, 113 North State Avenue, Kent, Wash., says:

Kent Post, No. 15, took action on your bill, H. R. 5545, indorsing it but recommending that in case some could not use the provisions of the bill, they be allowed the selection of a bonus.

Resolution adopted by unanimous vote at a regular meeting of Puget Sound Navy Yard Post No. 4, American Legion, August 25, 1919:

Whereas a bill entitled "The soldiers' and seamen's Federal home-founding act," House bill No. 5545, introduced on June 11, 1919, by the Hon. DICK T. MORGAN, of Oklahoma, is the one measure whose provisions are of such character as to be generally available to all ex-service men for the obtaining of homes on terms which are at once business-like and liberal. (This measure, in brief, provides for a loan on long time, with a low rate of interest, in amount not to exceed $4,000, for the purchase of a home either in town, city, or country. It is available alike to every honorably discharged soldier, seaman, or marine, without property qualification other than that of the property purchased, the additional security required by good business principles being supplied by the establishment of a guarantee fund): Therefore be it Resolved by Puget Sound Navy Yard Post No. 4, American Legion, That we indorse and recommend for passage H. R. 5545, introduced in the House of Representatives of the United States on June 11, 1919, by the Hon. DICK T. MORGAN, of Oklahoma, and that we do hereby respectfully request our Representatives in Congress to support this measure.

Mr. Dale McMullen, Smith-Reynolds Post, American Legion, Vancouver, Wash., in a letter, says:

I have had the pleasure of presenting your bill to the Smith-Reynolds Post of the American Legion and this post is very enthusiastic over the same. Action is being taken to secure as much support for this bill as possible. The delegates from this post to the State convention which was held in Seattle week before last were instructed to act favorably on this bill should it come before the convention.

Mr. George H. Gannon, Maynard-Price Post No. 52, Pullman, Wash., in a letter says:

This post has received a copy of your speech, in which you outline your plan for providing homes for soldiers and sailors, and we wish to congratulate you upon the study you have given this matter and the effort you are putting behind it.

After going over your plan thoroughly, we believe that you have hit upon the proper way of giving the ex-service men of the recent war the compensation which is due them. A direct bonus is not only distasteful to the men themselves, but it borders upon charity, and that in itself is not wholesome, especially for red-blooded Americans. Your plan gives us an opportunity to build something for ourselves, which is all any of we men who saw service are asking.

Individual indorsements.

Mr. W. P. McNulty, Bremerton, Wash., in a letter, says:

Your bill, H. R. 5545, is a good bill, and deserves the support of the House.

Mr. Raymond S. Scott, 935 West Fourth Street, Bremerton, Wash., says:

I want to thank you for the good work you are trying to do for the service men, as anything in this direction will be appreciated to the utmost.

Mr. J. W. Hewetson, Chewelah, Wash., in a letter, says:

The ex-service men are heartily in sympathy with the bill introduced by you.

Mr. Thomas I. Oakshatt, public service commission, Olympia, Wash., in a letter, says:

I just recently received a copy of your speech in the House on June 16, 1919, urging the passage of H. R. 5545, "soldiers' and seamen's Federal home-founding act."

While I have not yet had an opportunity to place it before the local post of the American Legion, representing 1,400 ex-service men, will do so at the next meeting, and as far as I am personally concerned am heartily in favor of it, as it provides a means whereby capital may serve the ex-service man without placing a heavy burden on the taxpayer.

UTAH.

Mr. George P. Dykes, Commercial Club, Salt Lake City, Utah, in a telegram under date of October 2, says:

Joseph Simmons Wolkes Post, No. 2, Utah Chapter, American Legion, unanimously indorse your bill providing money for homes for ex-service men.

VIRGINIA.

Mr. James E. Cahall, Camp Lee, Va., in a letter under date of October 27, 1919, says:

I leave on November 7, 1919, for Minneapolis, Minn., to attend the national convention of the American Legion in that city as delegate from Camp Lee. I will endeavor to recruit enough strength before the convention to assure the indorsement of the national convention of your bill.

The Railroad Bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. RICHARD YATES,
OF ILLINOIS,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, November 17, 1919,

On the bill (H. R. 10453) to provide for the termination of Federal control of railroads and systems of transportation; to provide for the settlement of disputes between carriers and their employees; to further amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended, and for other purposes, and had under consideration the amendment offered by Mr. BARKLEY, of Kentucky, to strike out a part of section 417—"page 65, line 9, after the word 'prescribed,' strike out the remainder of paragraph (1)."

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to that provision of the pending bill which enacts a rate-making rule. I mean those words beginning on line 14, page 65, section 417, which words are as follows:

In reaching its conclusions as to the justness and reasonableness of any rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, or practice, the commission shall take into consideration the interest of the public, the shippers, the reasonable cost of maintenance and operation (including the wages of labor, depreciation, and taxes), and a fair return upon the value of the property used or held for the service of transportation.

I concur in the language of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] when he said:

I hope that this language will be stricken out of the bill, and if it should not be it is my purpose to offer an amendment which will certainly give the commission greater discretion than it has under this language in the matter of fixing rates. Heretofore, for 30 years, ever since the establishment of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the rule of rate making has been that all rates, fares, charges, classifications, and regulations shall be just and reasonable.

All charges made for any service rendered or to be rendered in the transportation of passengers or property or in the transmission of intelligence by wire or wireless, as aforesaid, or in connection therewith, shall be just and reasonable, and every unjust and unreasonable charge for such service or any part thereof is prohibited and declared to be unlawful.

Under that language of the present law, in the act to regulate commerce, the Interstate Commerce Commission has built up a line of decisions, based upon the language which has been in the statute for the past 30 years, and also based on that language the Supreme Court has in a long line of decisions interpreted what was to be considered and might be considered in determining what is a just and reasonable rate.

I also concur in the language of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] when he said:

The unfortunate thing about that matter is that whenever you place in a statute a classification following a general rule, it is the classification that governs and not the general rule; and that rule has been laid down by every court in the United States, without exception, including the Supreme Court of the United States. I have brought here the language of the United States Supreme Court that applies absolutely to this case, in an opinion rendered in the case of Raleigh against Reid, 13 Wallace, page 269, where the court held that—

"When a statute limits a thing to be done to a particular mode, it includes a negation of any other mode."

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. I regret I can not. I have not the time. The case of Stevens against Smith, 10 Wallace, page 321, holds that—

"When a thing is to be done in a particular way, by necessary implication the doing of the thing in any other way is prohibited."

So, gentlemen, it is not a question of whether you want or do not want this limitation to be operative. It is operative, and the courts will so hold, and in every given case they will not be discussing whether or not it is just and fair and reasonable according to this general rule, but they will be discussing whether it falls within one of the four particular manners and things that may be considered, in the language which we seek to eliminate.

Mr. YATES. "Inclusio unius exclusio alterius."

Mr. TOWNER. Exactly. That is the old maxim of the law.

This is the proposition: Gentlemen say we ought to have these things stated in order to be fair to the roads. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE] states that these matters ought to be considered in justice and fairness to the railroads. This general rule first laid down is just as much for the benefit of the railroads as it is for the shippers, and as it is for the public. It includes and applies to everybody. Seek to limit it and you hurt everybody. Gentlemen here who are arguing for this limitation on the general rule in its application are not arguing for the railroads; they are arguing against them if they want to have a fair and just rule established in the United States. And so, gentlemen, this is a proposition which is of interest to everyone.

It so happens that for three years and a half I was railroad commissioner in my State. To state it accurately I was one of the five members of the Illinois State Public Utilities Commission from the first day of its existence, January 1, 1914, to June 30, 1917. There were numerous applications before that commission during those three years and many demands for better service by carriers and other public utilities. There were thousands of petitions relating to the rates and service of the telephone companies, gas companies, electric light companies, power companies, express companies, and so forth. There were also many applications and petitions for increase or decrease of rates of common carriers—steamboat companies, street railway companies, interurban companies, and even motor bus corporations. In addition, there were almost innumerable applications and petitions concerning the reasonableness of rates of railroads. I was the commissioner detailed to try a great many of these cases. It fell to my lot to preside over the hearing on perhaps the most important railroad rate case in Illinois. This was the "general 5 per cent freight rate advance" asked for by all the railroads, and embracing 16 different general subjects, one of which, for example, was the rate on coal. The hearing occurred in Chicago and was public; it lasted for 12 weeks. The testimony filled 5,000 typewritten pages. If printed in the same type, it would have been about the same size as the eight volumes of the Hinds' Precedents, with which all Members of Congress are familiar. After the close of the testimony the carriers and their numerous objectors, the latter numbering several hundred, divided into groups, took two months to file their written briefs, and the study and consideration of these briefs consumed five weeks more. In this study I was aided by the general counsel of the commission, the chief auditor, the chief transportation rate expert, and a special examiner. As to the 16 groups of rates involved, the commission granted increases in 4 and rejected the increase as to 12.

In that experience I became quite well satisfied with the rate-making clause of the Illinois State public-utilities act; in other words, section 41 of the act, which reads as follows:

41. Commission to fix rates and regulations.—Whenever the commission, after a hearing had upon its own motion or upon complaint, shall find that the rates or other charges, or classification, or any of them, demanded, observed, charged, or collected by any public utility for any service or product or commodity, or in connection therewith, including the rates of fares for excursion or commutation tickets, or that the rules, regulations, contracts, or practices, or any of them, affecting such rates or other charges, or classifications, or any of them, are unjust, unreasonable, discriminatory, or preferential, or in any wise in violation of any provision of law, or that such rates or other charges or classifications are insufficient, the commission shall determine the just, reasonable, or sufficient rates or other charges, classifications, rules, regulations, contracts, or practices to be thereafter observed and in force, and shall fix the same by order as hereinafter provided.

The commission shall have power upon a hearing had upon its own motion or upon complaint to investigate a single rate or other charge, classification, rule, regulation, contract, or practice, or any number thereof, or the entire schedule or schedules of rates or other charges, classifications, rules, regulations, contracts, and practices, or any thereof, of any public utility, and to establish new rates or other charges, classifications, rules, regulations, contracts, or practices, or schedule or schedules in lieu thereof: Provided, That nothing in this section or act shall be construed to repeal "An act to establish and regulate the maximum rate of charges for the transportation of passengers by corporations or companies operating or controlling railroads in part or in whole in this State, and to provide penalties for the violation of the provisions thereof, and repealing all acts and parts of acts in conflict therewith," approved May 27, 1907; in force July 1, 1907.

It will be observed that the power given the Illinois commission is to "determine the just, reasonable, or sufficient rates, or other charges, classifications, rules, regulations, contracts, or practices." And also to "fix the same by order as hereinafter provided," in all cases on the one hand where the commission after a hearing shall find that such rates or other charges or classifications, or any of them, are "unjust, unreasonable, discriminatory, or preferential," and on the other hand in all cases where "such rates or other charges or classifications are insufficient."

It will also be observed that this language of the Illinois commission does not prescribe or determine or undertake to limit just what the commission shall take into consideration in fixing a rate. In other words, no rate-making rule is laid down. Abundant experience from that time to this has demonstrated that such a rate-making rule was not at all necessary to arrive at the question whether a given rate or charge was excessive or insufficient.

I therefore think that if these words sought to be stricken out by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] are now stricken out by that amendment, and at the same time there are left in the act the words contained in lines 19 to 25, inclusive, which read as follows: "The commission is hereby authorized and empowered to determine and prescribe what will be the just and reasonable individual or joint rate, fare, or charge, or rates, fares, or charges, to be thereafter observed in such case, or the maximum, or minimum, or maximum and minimum, to be charged, and what individual or joint classification, regulation, or practice is or will be just, fair, and reasonable, to be thereafter followed," the Interstate Commerce Commission will on the one hand have all the power needed to determine what are just and reasonable rates and charges, and on the other hand not be limited by any specific rate-making rule.

While there is nothing in our country more vitally important to the shippers on the one side and the carriers on the other than just and reasonable rates and charges, and therefore nothing more vitally important to the public—to which the prosperity of both shippers and carriers is vitally important—it is also true that there is, in the whole range of the relations existing between the different elements and factors which make up our population and our mutual interest, that which is more complicated and involved and intricate than the making of a just and reasonable rate. Whole books have been written, indeed many ponderous volumes, upon the one question of depreciation alone, which is only one of the important factors, in the attempt to arrive at the "fair value" of the property of a given public utility.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] is right in invoking the old rule that any statute which grants power or powers excludes all other powers when it designates certain prescribed powers, even when a statute has enumerated certain powers and then sought to confer additional blanket powers, for example, by using such words as "all other officers." Such a statute has always been met by the old rule that "words of general import following words of particular significance are confined in their operation to the words of particular significance." If we should now vote down the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], and thus leave in the law a statement that in arriving at a rate the Interstate Commerce Commission shall or may take into consideration the four things mentioned—first, the interest of the people; second, the shippers; third, the reasonable cost of maintenance and operation; and, fourth, a fair return upon the value—we would have a law which would, beyond all question in my mind, prevent the Interstate Commerce Commission from taking into consideration a world of other factors which possibly ought to be taken into consideration in order to do justice to shippers and the carriers and the people. It is not necessary to try to specify what these additional factors might be or become. No man knows what a day may bring forth. The pace of American progress is so fast that that which seemed negligible yesterday looms large in the minds of men to-day.

Justice to all the interests involved demands that the Interstate Commerce Commission be not hampered by a rate-making rule.

It is to be noticed in passing that the report of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, page 20, submits the proposed rule of rate making without any argument whatever in its support.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CHARLES F. OGDEN,

OF KENTUCKY,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, November 15, 1919.

Mr. OGDEN. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, after many months devoted to patient hearings upon the transportation question, has reported a bill which reflects credit upon the committee and well entitles the membership of that committee to the commendation of the citizenship of this country.

The presentation of the bill by the chairman of the committee was most able and thorough. He very readily impressed the membership of the House that his great ability had been earnestly devoted to finding a solution of one of the most important industrial problems which has challenged the best thought of this country in the last half century.

In the light of the voluminous hearings conducted by the committee I have studied the bill, and it seems to me that the many important questions involved in our great transportation system have been met and that the roads will be enabled to render the most efficient and economical public service within their history.

In the beginning of this session President Wilson delivered to the House, in joint session, a message in which he stated, among other things, that his intention was to return the roads to private ownership and control by the first of the year. He made it mandatory upon the Congress to provide the machinery for the return of the roads, but he made no suggestion as to what plan he thought would be adequate. On the contrary, he very frankly admitted he had not evolved any plan in his own mind and had no suggestions to make on the subject. Manifestly, it was the committee's duty to act with all dispatch in the conduct of its hearings in assembling all the ascertainable facts, to the end that a bill should be drawn embracing provisions for the return of the roads to their owners and enabling them to function according to the needs of the country.

The consequences of inaction by the Congress would be far-reaching in view of the President's announced intention, and for one I wish to express my gratitude to the committee for presenting a bill that seems to meet all requirements for the successful operation of the transportation system.

It was the unanimous opinion of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee that the roads should be returned to private ownership, and whatever may have been the opinion of the members of that committee in the beginning or during the progress of the hearing, which extended over a period of many months, it is now evident that not a single member of the committee, at the conclusion of the hearing, entertained the slightest doubt concerning the advisability and wisdom of returning the roads to the possession and control of their owners. The continuance of these properties in the control of the Government has not been advocated or insisted upon by any member of the committee, and I think I am justified in saying that, on the contrary, the entire membership, not only of the committee but of the House, believes that the economical operation of the properties and the development and advancement of the enterprises of the country dictate private ownership and control of the roads.

Mr. Speaker, the largely increased power given to the Interstate Commerce Commission by the bill will prove of inestimable value to the public and will afford a great benefit to the carriers as well. A broad jurisdiction vested in a governmental agency is indispensable to the retention of many benefits which have accrued to the public during Federal operation. Permission for the interchange of equipment, the joint use of terminals, the pooling of traffic earnings, together with the joint use of cars, locomotives, and vehicles, to be exercised under and pursuant to the authority of the Commerce Commission is a decided improvement over the prewar system. Pooling arrangements and merging of interests dependent only upon the voluntary action of the corporations would be subversive of public interest without the public interest constituting the controlling factor as expressed by a governmental agency. If these corporations were left to pursue their own course in matters of this kind, they would be directed by their own interest, irrespective of how the public might be affected. Indeed, they would become monopolies and the evil effects of their practices would be visited upon the people from one end of this country to the other. Large and ever-increasing benefits would no doubt flow from such arrangements, but in the main the corporations themselves would be the recipients and public interests would suffer.

However, Mr. Speaker, this bill suspends existing law and places the discretionary power with the commission of authorizing the pooling of traffic earnings or equipment when the interest of the public justifies such action. In our experience during the war, when the railroads of the entire country were operated as a unified system, we found that consolidations and poolings had become a necessity. The Director General, however, was unwilling to completely coordinate the terminals and operations of the railroad facilities, because of the difficulty of restoring them to normal conditions when the railroads should be returned to corporate control. Once scrambled, he naturally feared the probable impossibility of unscrambling them. So in these respects all that might have otherwise been accomplished was in the common interest avoided. On the other hand, the car equipment of the railroads was pooled and completely coordinated. Under the proposed law the coordination of the terminals and facilities will be more complete, to the resultant increase in the benefits which will accrue to the country from the exercise of this power vested in the commission.

I wish to insert the following excerpt from a letter addressed to me by the Louisville Live Stock Exchange upon this particular provision of the bill:

It is the consensus of opinion that the present plan of pooling freight equipment should be continued under the jurisdiction of the car service section or a similar body. Under prewar conditions the home routing of cars worked to a serious disadvantage at many points. At Louisville it was not infrequent to have on hand in the terminals empty stock cars for loading via the Pennsylvania and Big Four, while at the same time live stock was on hand in the stockyards awaiting movement via other lines which were unable to supply equipment. At times the Louisville & Nashville Railroad had ample supply of cars to bring stock into the market and northern lines were unable to furnish equipment to take it out, but the cars which brought the stock in were not permitted to be used on the outbound movement. These handicaps have been eliminated by the pooling plan.

It is also our opinion that reciprocal switching in all terminals should be continued. Prior to Government control of railroads, the Louisville & Nashville Railroad refused to switch competitive traffic to and from connecting lines and industries located on the Louisville & Nashville rails at Louisville. This ruling required us to forward all our eastern traffic via the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, to Cincinnati, precluding the live-stock shippers from availing themselves of the expeditious train service from Louisville to eastern points via the Big Four Railroad and Baltimore & Ohio Railroad.

Reciprocal switching has also had the effect of greatly improving conditions in general throughout the terminals here. We have records to show that prior to Government control a goodly portion of our stock was from 5 to 12 hours in switch movement through the terminals, while under the present arrangement it is being handled in from 40 minutes to three hours.

The pooling of freight-car equipment and open terminals are of vital importance in building up the live-stock industry in the South, and as representatives of the live-stock interests throughout Kentucky and Tennessee we most earnestly urge that you use your good offices to see that these features are embodied in the railroad legislation now pending.

Under the prewar system I have no doubt that there were many like instances of injustice practiced by the carriers upon important industries throughout the country, and I am glad that in this bill there will be found ample provisions for correcting injurious practices, including the one referred to by the Louisville Live Stock Exchange. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that upon an efficient and effective transportation system depends the welfare of the people, the development of the country, and our national economic structure. If our transportation system is to function and measure up to the requirements and needs of the people, the Congress must provide a constructive policy that will put these properties upon a financial footing. Every man of thought must recognize the fact that the railroads are essentially instrumentalities of the public as a whole, and that the progress we shall make as a Nation and the development of the country that we shall achieve will depend very largely upon the legislation which this Congress enacts.

The importance to the best interests of the country of an efficient transportation system is, indeed, a sufficient reason for providing the reasonable period of six months following the end of Federal control for steadying the roads. This stabilizing will be accomplished by means of the guaranteed net revenue and the revolving fund from which loans can be made. Entertaining the conviction that the companies would totter to bankruptcy without this assistance from the Federal Government, I feel that it would be destructive of public interest to withhold the stabilizing hand.

Especially is this true when you consider that these companies have been controlled in the expenditures out of their revenue by the policy of the Federal Government. Mr. Speaker, in my support of this bill I am not influenced by the single desire of seeing the railroad corporations prosper. But as one who believes that his country's interest should be the first and foremost consideration of every man and that an efficient railroad system is the most potent factor in the development and advancement of the country, I advocate proper assistance to the railroads during this period of transition.

It is an accepted fact that the shipper and the people are entitled to first-class service and the employees to a wage scale that will permit them to provide the necessaries and comforts of life and afford their children training and opportunity for qualifying themselves for real responsibilities. I have always believed that a nation advances in accordance with the progress that is made by its citizenship as a whole. And unless labor prospers and contributes its share in every department of life the advancement of the Nation is retarded and delayed.

Unless the carrier prospers, besides not being able to give good and efficient service to the public, it can not pay its employees the wages to which they are entitled.

The so-called Anderson amendment or substitute to the provisions of the bill under title 3 is an improvement on the plan proposed by the committee. Both plans are based on the principle of conciliation, but the Anderson plan, besides being less expensive to the Federal Government, sets up a series of boards, each composed of an equal number of members selected by employers and employees. Questions of dispute passing through the boards thus created will undoubtedly be adjusted by virtue of the two sides being brought into close contact.

The former plan of adjusting disputes in conference between the representatives of the class or classes of employees affected thereby and representatives of the carrier or carriers designated or authorized to act is retained in the law, and it is only when a dispute is not adjusted in that conference that it may go before one of the three boards of adjustment created by this act. If a majority decision is not reached by the board of adjustment an appeal lies to one of the three commissions on labor disputes, also created by this act.

The class of employees in which the dispute arises determines the particular board of adjustment or the commission of labor to which the dispute shall go by appeal.

The trend of the times, Mr. Speaker, is in favor of the conciliatory plan in deciding and disposing of disputes between employer and employee, and the bill as it now stands sets up the most efficient machinery of that kind. It will not do to destroy the principle of collective bargaining. It has long been recognized that this principle is just and that labor is well within its rights in insisting upon preservation of a principle which one of the foremost citizens of this age, a leader in thought and action, Col. Theodore Roosevelt, strongly advocated.

This country can not do without labor, and labor can not do without unions. It is true that recently there have been self-proclaimed labor leaders preaching un-American doctrines. But it is the policy and wish of the labor organizations to purge themselves of such individuals. These organizations do not stand for such un-American doctrines, and I am sure that the day is close at hand when the criticism of the labor organizations now indulged in by a certain part of the public will cease. I shall vote for the bill with enthusiasm, because I feel that its provisions are sound and meet every requirement of a constructive policy of transportation.

The Esch Railroad Bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ANTHONY J. GRIFFIN,

OF NEW YORK,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, November 17, 1919,

On the bill (H. R. 10453) to provide for the termination of Federal control of railroads and systems of transportation; to provide for the settlement of disputes between carriers and their employees; to further amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended, and for other purposes.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, the circumstances under which this bill has been presented to the House preclude the great bulk of the membership from giving it the attention it deserves. It is to be regretted that the bill as finally reported by the committee was not sooner printed for general perusal. When called into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to give this bill consideration it is safe to say that not 10 Members outside of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce were familiar with its provisions.

Of course, we all know that a bill to terminate Federal control of the railroads was in process of formation. We were in daily receipt of propaganda both in favor of and against Government ownership and also considerable literature on the so-called Plumb plan, but what form of bill the lucubrations of the committee would finally bring forth was a matter only of vague conjecture. Called upon, under these circumstances, on only one day's notice, to go into Committeee of the Whole for the consideration of this measure, section by section, and to vote intelligently upon its provisions, has imposed upon the House a great burden and a grave responsibility.

The first impression awakened by the perusal of this bill and the committee report is one of admiration for the painstaking efforts of the chairman and the members of the committee. No one who has not made a study of this most difficult question can fully appreciate their labors. While I accord full credit to the framer of this bill for diligence and the fullest understanding of the subject, I regret to say that I can not agree either with the wisdom of surrendering Federal control at this time or the method of carrying it out.

I believe that at this particular crisis it is more essential that the Government retain control of the railroads than at any other time in our history. We should retain the railroads, in my opinion, until we have got back to normal conditions. It is vital to the readjustment of our industrial affairs that there should be no violent change in railroad management or rates until industrial and labor conditions become more settled. The very terms of this bill invite discord, discontent, and disorganization. The so-called owners of the railroads should be content to wait until they can see their way clear to resume control without guaranties or loans of large sums from the Government and without advancing passenger or freight rates. The best proof that this is no time to turn back the railroads to private control is contained in those provisions of the bill which accord to the railroad corporations these very guaranties.

OBJECTIONABLE FEATURES.

These guaranties are the most objectionable features of the bill:

First, there is the guaranty of income to railroads for six months following the termination of Federal control, based on their income for a test period of three years ending June 30, 1917, a period which was the best in their history. Upon what theory such a guaranty is expected or granted is difficult to discern. If the railroad corporations are anxious to reassume control of the various lines, it would seem that they ought to be willing to take them as they are and run them at their own risk. If they are unwilling to take the risk, they can not very earnestly desire their return. This is carrying paternalism just a little too far. Furthermore, it leads to other evils not less dangerous; for in order to lessen the amount of the guaranties which it is expected the Government will have to pay, the framers of the bill were obliged to tack onto the section a proviso requiring the railroads, within 60 days after the termination of Federal control, to file with the Interstate Commerce Commission schedules embodying general increases in their rates. Thus to save the United States Treasury—note the inconsistency—the public in general is to be mulcted! What difference does it make in the end whether the Government pays in the form of a guaranty or the public pays in the form of freight and passenger rates? Ultimately the burden falls on the consumer, whereas it should in fact fall on the railroad corporations as one of the risks of private ownership. The Government might just as well undertake to guarantee certain profits to the butcher and the baker with a similar proviso that they shall increase their charges to the public in order to save the Government as much as possible. It is obvious that such legislation is disingenuous and is only an indirect method of authorizing and justifying an advance in rates.

Second, there is the appropriation of the enormous sum of $250,000,000 as a revolving fund for the purpose of making loans to the railroads during the period of two years following the termination of Federal control. To speak plainly, this is simply a scheme to finance the railroads at governmental expense. Have we not, in the name of all that is sacred, done enough in the past to help private enterprise to exploit the public domain without assuming this additional burden? Where is this policy going to end? The railroad corporations profess to be anxious to get back what they call their properties. Very well, let them take them! "All right," they say, "we will take them; but we want Uncle Sam to guarantee our profits for six months; we want to increase our rates; and we want $250,000,000 to help us finance the roads." May we not justly ask in reply, "Well, gentlemen, we have heard what you want us to do; now what do you propose to do on your part?" What will they do? That is the question. I will tell you what they will do. They will increase their own salaries, as well as rates, and will manipulate on Wall Street as of yore for their own individual advantage.

GOVERNMENT CONTROL.

Our seizure of the railroads of the country was not without precedent. During the Civil War the Government, inspired by military necessity, seized and operated certain railroads.

Our action in the Great World War was prompted by like solicitude for coordination of transportation and general efficiency. We have heard a great deal of the efficiency of private control. If private control of great public utilities was really efficient and reliable, we would never have had occasion in the crisis of war to put an end to it. The whole truth of the matter is that private ownership and control of great public utilities can never be, in the very nature of things, as efficient as public control. If that were not a generally recognized truth, we would never have had Government control of education and the Postal Service. If it were not the truth, we would never have taken over the control of the railroads at a crucial period in our history. What public crisis now requires that the control should be relinquished? None that I know of, except that the manipulators of railroad securities, having surfeited themselves in war activities, and now having nothing else to do, would like to keep their hands in shape by getting back on their old job.

GOVERNMENT CONTROL EFFICIENT.

To-day the Government control of the railroads is the most efficient that the country has had in years. They are earning the standard return and a few millions additional every month, and the prospect is growing brighter day by day. There is no demand for their immediate return except such as is deliberately inspired by those who are anxious to stick their hands once more into the fleshpots.

Surely commercial organizations, with their eyes open, can not demand such a return to private ownership when they are informed that the termination of Federal control will mean the instantaneous increase of freight rates by perhaps 50 per cent—an increase which would involve a load upon the business man and ultimate consumer of several billions of dollars a year. Do you not believe it? What, then, is the meaning of section 207 of the bill, requiring the railroads to file schedules of increased rates, fares, and charges?

If the Government is now earning the standard return with several millions to spare each month upon the existing rates, fares, and charges, why is it necessary to even allow, much less require, the private owners, upon assumption of control, to immediately increase their rates?

SUCCESS OF FEDERAL CONTROL.

In all the clamor for the return of the railroads the fact that the Government is making the railroads pay is utterly ignored. The propagandists also ignore the fact that the Railroad Administration during the first year of its control overcame successfully the most stupendous obstacles. Among other things, it had to meet the worst winter in the history of railroads. It transported millions of men back and forth between the coast and the various cantonments. Notwithstanding the limited supply of serviceable locomotives and cars, it overcame the most alarming freight congestion in our history. It eliminated wasteful competition and made many improvements in the handling of freight and passengers, and made an annual saving in administration expenses of nearly $100,000,000. It improved the working conditions of labor and made substantial increases in wages. In short, the Government is doing very well and should be let alone until some carefully matured plan is worked out for a better system of railroad management than private ownership and exploitation has heretofore given us. The whole subject should be intrusted to a commission of experts who are familiar with the subject or who would make a special study of the railroad problem both here and abroad.

SCANDALS IN PRIVATE CONTROL.

Compare the careful, economical, and efficient control of our railroads under the Railroad Administration with the scandalous conduct of many of our greatest roads under private ownership.

THE CONTINENTAL RAILROADS.

The record of the Credit Mobilier, whose tentacles caught in its embrace directors of railroads, lawyers, judges, and legislators, makes one of the most humiliating pages in our history. To those who are interested, I refer to the Poland report, No. 77, of a select committee of the House which investigated this unsavory scandal in 1873. Another inquiry was made into the affairs of the Union Pacific Railroad Co., and the Wilson report, No. 78, made to the House of Representatives, exposes a state of affairs equally discreditable. One of the favored arguments against Federal control of any large enterprise is the fear of graft. And that, too, notwithstanding the splendid record of Federal control of our postal system. It is no exaggeration to say that there was more fraud and more waste of public moneys through private control of the great continental railroads in the score of years between 1853 and 1873 than in our entire history.

The private control of railroads is little short of a national scandal. Between 1913 and 1917 the Interstate Commerce Commission investigated five railroad systems and made findings as follows:

First. The New Haven Road. See report No. 6569, July 11, 1914.

Second. The Louisville & Nashville. See report No. 4788, February 9, 1915.

Third. Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific. See report No. 6834, July 31, 1915.

Fourth. St. Louis & San Francisco. See report No. 5933, January 20, 1914.

Fifth. Cincinnati, Hamilton & Dayton and the Pere Marquette. See report No. 6833, March 13, 1917.

Notwithstanding the fact that the commission was handicapped by the destruction of many of the records, in the attempt of the culprits to conceal their misconduct, the evidence showed that every one of the companies investigated had knowingly falsified its accounts in order to hide large expenditures improperly employed in controlling politics and corrupting public officials.

THE NEW HAVEN SCANDAL.

The New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad on June 30, 1903, with a total mileage of 2,040 miles, had a total capitalization of $93,000,000, of which $79,000,000 was stock and $14,000,000 bonds.

On June 30, 1912, the capitalization, excluding stock premiums, had been increased to $417,000,000, an increase of $324,000,000 in nine years, although in that time mileage operated had only been increased 50 miles.

Upon what was this vast increase of capital stock issued? In 1903 it only owned 438 miles of the total mileage operated. It used up about $40,000,000 in acquiring the ownership of about 800 miles of additional mileage. It expended $96,000,000 for betterment and equipment, making a total of $136,000,000 expended for purely railroad purposes. It therefore collected from the investing public on its stock $204,000,000 which it expended or invested in matters outside of railroad operation. What were these investments? Why, the purchase of steamship and trolley lines, and, incidentally, $56,500 to the Republican national campaign committee.

The New England Navigation Co., New England Steamship Co., and the United States Transportation Co. figure largely in dubious transactions whereby the stockholders of the New Haven Road were mulcted heavily. See reports of the Interstate Commerce Commission, volume 27 and volume 31, which disclose the details of the whole scandalous history of the New Haven Road.

Referring to the New York, Westchester & Boston Railway Co. adventure the commission states:

The Westchester is a story of profligate waste of corporate funds. * * * The enormous sum of $36,434,173.25 was expended for a road only 18.03 miles in extent, which is being operated at an annual loss of approximately $1,250,000, and which will have to increase its earnings four and one-half fold before it can pay its operating expenses and fixed charges.

QUESTIONABLE METHODS.

As to the questionable methods employed by the directors of the New Haven road to increase the amount of its capital stock, the Interstate Commerce Commission, in one of its reports, makes the following scathing arraignment:

Increases in capital stock of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Co. have been made upon the basis of transfers of assets from one subordinate company to another.

The steamship properties of this system at one time were held by the New England Navigation Co., approximating a cost of $11,500,000. This latter company in 1907 transferred the title to these steamship properties to the Consolidated Railway Co., at a value of $20,000,000. The Consolidated Railway Co. thereupon increased its capital stock $20,000,000. The Consolidated Railway Co. was then merged with the New Haven and the stock of the latter company increased $30,000,000, $20,000,000 of which went to the New England Navigation Co., and placing in its treasury by this transaction $20,000,000 Consolidated Railway stock, which, by the merger, became New Haven stock, with a market value of over $30,000,000. It was this stock with which control of the Boston & Maine Railroad Co. was secured.

After the New England Navigation Co. had divested itself of the steamship properties, to operate which it was formed, one would naturally expect that the Navigation Co., having served its purpose, would have been closed up and its charter surrendered; but having a charter which had powers sufficiently large to permit of general banking operations, the Navigation Co. has been utilized from time to time as a holding company for the accomplishment of irregular transactions, indefensible under any test of sound business management. (P. 57, vol. 31, Interstate Commerce Commission Reports.)

FALSIFICATION OF BOOKS.

The extent of the fraudulent methods of the New Haven road is well illustrated in the following extracts from the report of the Interstate Commerce Commission:

As one illustration of the devious financial operations of this railroad, let us take the undisputed facts appearing of record as to shifting of funds to show dividends earned in the year 1912, as exhibited in the annual accounts. This is not an isolated case, but was more in the nature of a practice with the subsidiary companies, as the investigation discloses.

To make up its own income account the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Co. reported as receiving certain sums as dividend on stocks owned and controlled, the largest of which appears to be a dividend of $2,252,500 from the New England Navigation Co., which was paid, according to the record, on June 26 and June 29, 1912. Prior to June 26, 1912, the cash balance of the New England Navigation Co. appears to have been $168,368.35. During the days intervening between June 26 and June 29, 1912, the Navigation Co. received from sundry sources $24,103.26, making a total of $192,471.61. These amounts represent the aggregate of the cash on hand with which the New England Navigation Co. had to pay to the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Co. $2,252,500 as dividends on its stock owned by the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Co. To enable them to pay the dividend in cash the New England Navigation Co. gave to the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Co. its demand note, receiving therefor $2,000,000 in cash.

The effect of the transaction means that the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Co. advanced $2,000,000 in cash for another company to pay to it dividends on its stock, and included the amount so advanced in its income account as a dividend received. In other words, the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Co. set up in its income account as item of $2,000,000 on the one side, and as asset consisting of $2,000,000 in paper on the other side.

* * * * * * *

The accounts of the company are replete with instances in which profits have been declared to be earned by the transfer of stocks, bonds, debentures, and securities of one of the subordinate and subsidiary companies of the New Haven system to another such subsidiary, and such profits are solemnly recorded as real profits in making up the accounts of the system as a whole.

Transactions of this kind do not make real profits any more than the transfer of money or securities from one pocket to another would result in profit to an individual.

When it is remembered that this system is made up of more than 300 companies, independently chartered, and that subsidiary and holding companies were created in large numbers to serve some temporary purpose or some ulterior design of those who operated the system as a whole, and as there was almost a continuous passage of securities between these companies the difficulty in unraveling the intricate affairs of this company has presented a serious problem in this investigation. (Pp. 58, 59, 60, vol. 31, Interstate Commerce Commission Reports.)

WILL REGULATION SUFFICE?

Will regulation suffice to correct these scandals? On the subject of regulation of railroads the public service commission of Massachusetts in its first annual report makes this very significant statement:

Regulation may compel the correction of definite evils like the use of unsanitary cars, but regulation can not make an inefficient business efficient. Regulation can not convert a poorly managed railroad into a well-managed railroad. Regulation can not supply initiative or energy nor infuse into railroad executives a will to please the people. Regulation can not overcome the anaemia or wasting sickness which attends monopoly. Regulation may curb but it can do little to develop the activity of railroad officials. (P. 105, vol. 1, Report Massachusetts Public Service Commission, 1913.)

Further on the commission has this to say—

The public will no longer tolerate the spectacle of directors of our railroads trading with themselves, whether the transaction involves bankers' commissions for underwriting or marketing securities, or whether it involves a sale of railroads, trolleys, or hotels. Our railroad companies will neither have nor be entitled to have public confidence until the directorates, without exception, recognize that it always takes two to make a real and honest bargain. Positions upon the directorates of our great railroad corporations must be regarded as positions of onerous responsibility. Men looking merely for places of easy honor and emolument or to cast votes for the benefit of express companies or for the sake of granting special transportation privileges to some manufacturing interests, have no proper place upon these directorates. (Pp. 106, 107, vol. 1, Report Massachusetts Public Service Commission, 1913.)

WHO OWNS THE RAILROADS?

The talk of returning the railroads to the owners has a fair sound. Every honest man is naturally in favor of returning any kind of property to anyone to whom it belongs. But before the return is made he will first make sure who is the owner. Who are the owners of the railroads? This question brings out a varying response. If asked in this House to-day, in the heat of discussion, and with the spectre of Government ownership in the distance, eloquent gentlemen would instantly and tearfully respond that the owners of the railroads are the widows, the orphans, the mechanics, the laborers, the clerks, and the professional men who have invested their hard-earned savings in the railroad stocks. But on another occasion, when Government ownership is not hovering near they will just as readily answer that the owners are the smug group of financiers who have the controlling interest and who water the stocks and speculate to their own advantage in Wall Street and in the other great gambling marts of the world.

Neither answer, however, is correct. The real owner of railroads is the entire people of the United States. A railroad, fundamentally, is a highway on which rails are laid and upon which vehicles are run to transport passengers and freight. To secure this cooperation of desire and means, first the land and then the investment of money is essential. The investment of the people at large is their dedication of the highway upon which the rails are laid. The investment of the railway corporation is that which is necessary to buy and lay the rails, to build rolling stock and stations and equipment. The most valuable investment—the largest investment—is therefore that made by the people themselves. In addition to the dedication of the land, the United States Government and the governments of the various States have also contributed large sums of money to inaugurate the great railroad systems.

The granting of public lands to the States for the encouragement of railroads was initiated on September 20, 1850, by the passage of an act donating two and a half million acres of public land to the States through which the roads were to run for the benefit of the Illinois Central and the Mobile & Ohio Railroads.

On December 22, 1852, Senator William M. Gwin, of California, introduced a bill in the Senate authorizing the grant of public lands for the construction of a railroad to extend from the Mississippi to the Pacific. The bill was referred to a special committee which evolved a bill of its own empowering the President to select a route, giving a right of way 300 feet in width for the road and telegraph line, and appropriating for the construction of the road alternate sections of public lands, 6 miles on either side. In addition to this $20,000,000 was appropriated to supply any deficiency in the funds resulting from the sale of lands.

Although the bill ultimately failed, it provoked an interesting debate, in which Senator Joseph R. Underwood, of Kentucky, promulgated this very pregnant thought:

Now, I appeal to the common sense of mankind and ask, if our ancestors had constitutional power 60 years ago to aid commerce by building lighthouses and planting buoys along the seaboard, may not their posterity aid commerce by building a railroad from the seaboard into the interior, without violating the Constitution? (P. 196, Vol. X, Great debates in American History.)

The sentiment for the construction of the continental railroad had grown to such an extent that in 1860 all the political parties or their candidates favored the construction of such a road by the Government. On July 1, 1862, an act was passed by Congress granting to the Central Pacific, Kansas Pacific, and Union Pacific Railroad corporations vast tracts of public land to assist them in raising the money to build the respective roads. The grants of land were made directly to the corporations and not, as in the case of the Illinois Central and the Mobile & Ohio, to the States through which the projected roads were to run.

This was the turning point in our railroad history, and inaugurated a vicious system of railroad aggrandizement that has led to countless evils. The start thus made was followed by the granting of 47,000,000 acres to the Northern Pacific Railroad and 42,000,000 acres to the Atlantic & Pacific Railroad.

Before the title to these lands had properly passed to the corporations and become valid by the completion of the railroads, the latter entered upon a course of land speculation that soon became a national scandal. Successive bills were introduced in Congress to restore to the Government the lands thus misappropriated. These attempts failed.

Senator Wilkinson Call, of Florida, on June 2, 1886, stated that the effect of the granting of these lands to the Northern Pacific was equivalent to building and equipping the road from end to end and making the corporations a present of $3,000,000 besides as a bonus for building it.

In the State of New York we have eight small roads, which are now absorbed in the New York Central system. To assist these roads in the beginning the State appropriated more money than it laid out for the Erie Canal, which cost originally $7,200,000. The State of New York advanced these railroads $8,260,591, and of this sum only $756,152 was ever returned. Over $7,000,000 is still owing to-day, and if compound interest on that sum were computed it would now amount to more than $100,000,000. These eight roads now composing the New York Central system were built for $10,462,000; that is, taking the companies' figures. At the time of the consolidation they were capitalized at $23,085,600, of which $12,623,600 was simply water. This is only an example of what has been done in nearly every State in the Union. There is not a railroad in the country that does not belong by priority of right and bulk of investment to the entire people.

THE PEOPLE SHOULD HAVE THE GUARANTIES; NOT THE RAILROADS.

The original incorporators were shrewd manipulators. They got back more than they put in many times over. They ought not to be considered when we come to the question of what we shall do with the railroads. The first problem to be considered is how we may best conserve the interests of the entire people. If that leads ultimately to Government ownership, we ought not to be afraid to take the step. So wise and conservative a statesman as John Sherman did not hesitate, when he thought the public interest required it, to introduce a bill in the Senate on January 22, 1869, to charter three Government railroads from the Capital to various points. But whatever the solution may be, we ought not now at this time to turn the railroads back to private or corporate interests without securing full and adequate guaranties that the roads will be managed honestly and economically. The present bill before us gives all the guaranties to the railroads. What is needed in this crisis is a bill which will give guaranties to all the people of the land—that will protect commerce and industry from rebates and rate discrimination, prevent stock watering and speculation, accord to labor adequate emolument and encouragement, and secure to the public at large the right to reasonable rates and the facilities of dependable transportation.

The Railroad Bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. MILTON H. WELLING,
OF UTAH,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Monday, November 17, 1919,

On the bill (H. R. 10453) to provide for the termination of Federal control of railroads and systems of transportation; to provide for the settlement of disputes between carriers and their employees; to further amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended, and for other purposes.

Mr. WELLING. Mr. Speaker, I have, after a week of study, reluctantly decided that I can not support the pending bill. This measure was reported to the House on Monday, November 10. It was considered Tuesday and Wednesday of that week in general debate by members of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. We considered the bill under the five-minute rule for four days and were called upon to pass finally upon the measure on Monday, the 17th.

The bill comprises 86 pages, and it has not been humanly possible in the short time afforded to understand, except in a most general way, its provisions. Even the members of the committee, who have had this bill constantly before them for months and stand sponsors for the legislation, differ wholly in their interpretations of its obscure language and technical phraseology.

The bill is divided into four subdivisions. Title I, comprising 2 pages, is devoted to definitions. Title II, comprising 20 pages, deals with the termination of Federal control and the return of the roads to their owners. Title III, comprising 17 pages, contains the labor provisions of the bill. Title IV, containing 47 pages, is a revision of the interstate-commerce act and consists of more than a hundred separate and isolated amendments to this law, which has been on the statute books since 1887—more than 32 years.

It is an interesting study to consider the history of certain provisions of this measure. Section 205 of Title II, which comprises three full pages of the bill, was not written into the bill by the subcommittee which reported to the full committee. The subcommittee, after months of hearings, reported an entirely different provision. Not only that, but they reported it unanimously. Section 205 was then lifted bodily from the bill, and a new section, known as the Merritt amendment, was inserted in its place. The Merritt amendment is therefore section 205 of the pending bill. This provision of the bill provides for the liquidating of the debts of the carriers to the Government and of the Government to the carriers. The scheme proposed does not seem to me to be proper or fair. It provides that we shall pay at once to the carriers all that we owe them, but that they shall have 10 years' time before they are obliged to pay anything which they owe us. No man would apply such a principle in conducting his private business. If, when we balance our accounts, it is discovered that I owe you $100 and you owe me $50, I would deduct the $50 which you owe me and then arrange to pay you the other $50. In this bill we say to the carriers, "We will pay you the $50 which we owe you at once, but you may have 10 years before we will ask you to begin to pay us back the $100 which you owe us." The carriers owe the Government to-day the enormous sum of $1,147,551,000. We owe them, perhaps, $897,551,000, part of which is liquidated by setoffs. The bill as proposed by the committee requires the Government to pay the balance of this enormous sum at once and wait for years to begin to receive back what the roads owe us.

I want to deal fairly with the railroads. I am quite willing that the Government shall say to them, "We are now starting you out in business for yourself. We will guarantee to give you your standard return for the first six months after you begin business." That will cost this country at least $150,000,000. The bill gives that as a matter of justice to provide for the period of reorganization and readjustment; but I am unwilling to go to the American taxpayer for an additional loan of $200,000,000 in addition to the standard return, for these roads. The amount which we owe them ought to be deducted now from what they owe the Government and give them the time they need to pay the balance at the same rate of interest which we have paid to them during the period of Government control.

The six months' guaranty is in itself subject to one serious condemnation and ought in that respect to be changed. We pay all roads alike a standard return equal to the average return of those roads during the three-year period of 1915, 1916, and 1917. Some few of the very large roads are earning much more than this standard return. Many of the weak roads earn nothing. Heretofore we have had the large, strong roads to help pay the losses incurred on the weaker roads. Under this bill we say to the strong roads, "You may keep all you can earn as soon as you go back to private control." But the large number of poorer roads must be provided their full standard return, or, if they are losing money, not less than 6 per cent on their capital invested, even though they lose money every day. That is an unfair burden on the taxpayer. If we must guarantee the standard return—and I think we will be obliged to go that far—then the large, prosperous roads should be obliged to limit their income to the standard return of the prewar period and the balance should be applied to the amount the Government must pay the roads which are losing money. As stated, even that arrangement would cost the taxpayers at least $150,000,000, and perhaps much more.

The plan adopted in this bill will certainly cost much more than that. What I have already said about the impossibility of understanding this measure has been illustrated by the action of the House in reversing completely the action of the committee upon this funding feature of the bill. I approve of the amendment adopted by the House, but it must be admitted that the House action was taken hastily and without mature deliberation. It is some satisfaction to know that the final action of the House on the funding feature conforms substantially to the provision as it was originally incorporated in the bill by the subcommittee which framed the measure.

Title III of the bill, containing the labor provisions, covering 17 pages, was rejected altogether by the House and a new labor program was written into the law. Three plans were proposed to the House. The Webster plan provided machinery and courts for compulsory arbitration and made the property of all labor organizations liable for the damage incurred in a strike. I think these last provisions went altogether too far and could not be made to succeed. The Anderson amendment, which was finally adopted by the House, went to the other extreme and adopted a program formulated by the labor leaders themselves. Its maze of adjustment committees, Nos. 1, 2, and 3, have no power of enforcing their decisions and will probably fail completely to function in settling the great labor problems confronting the country at this time. One particular defect of the plan is that members of one brotherhood may be called upon to adjust a dispute between the carriers and an entirely different brotherhood with whose business they are unfamiliar.

It is significant of the whole undigested plan of the bill that after less than three hours' debate 17 pages of a great measure affecting the labor of our railroads should be rejected and an entirely dissimilar provision added to the bill hastily by the Committee of the Whole House.

As before stated, Title IV of the bill consists of numerous amendments to the interstate-commerce act, and these amendments take up 47 pages of the proposed law. I feel that the committee has been very diligent in their study of these questions. The House, in the main, was guided by their judgment in the matter.

One important item which came to the House in the bill has been eliminated, and that without doubt strengthens the measure. Section 417, paragraph 1, of Title IV undertakes to write into the law an entirely new rule of rate making to guide the commission. It provides that in making a rate the commission, after taking into account the cost of the road and the frequency of the service, shall be obliged to make a rate which will in all cases yield a profit to the carrier.

The House rejected an amendment to this bill which forbade a carrier to charge a less price for a longer than a shorter haul. The interior West has suffered from this condition for many years, and under the terms of this bill we are given no relief. If the freight on a shipment of steel for a building in San Francisco is $60,000, the same steel, taken from the cars at Ogden, Utah, 900 miles inland, bears a freight rate of $80,000. Every other article of merchandise or freight is subject, under this bill, to the same destructive discrimination against inland cities.

The bill undertakes to provide, and does provide, for protection of the water rate of coastwise and river shipping in the East. Permission is given the commission to adjust rail rates so that water competition will not be destroyed, at the same time protecting the interests of the shipper. The very opposite policy has been adopted with reference to rates in the intermountain country. The Panama Canal is our "inland waterway." We were taxed to construct it. We were proud of the achievement which joined the waters of the Atlantic and the waters of the Pacific, and made a short, convenient, and safe route of travel between our eastern and western seaboards. And now, having joined with you in this great enterprise of constructing the canal, we find ourselves penalized because of its existence.

The transcontinental rail rates from New York City and Boston to cities on the Pacific coast are lowered to meet the water rate through the Panama Canal. Because of this destructive rail rate from coast to coast, the carriers increase the rail rate from the east coast to interior, intermountain points as high as the traffic will bear. In other words, having first been taxed to build the canal, we are now taxed to support a freight rate because the canal is there.

If the amendment of the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], which has already received the indorsement of the Committee on Commerce of the Senate, had been adopted for this bill, it would have made it unlawful in the future to charge less for a long than for a short haul, and this injustice and inequality would have been corrected.

It has been said that this condition can not be remedied without destroying the whole rate structure built up during the past 30 years. I think there can not possibly be found a better time to correct this inequality than the present, when the roads are being turned back to their owners under the fostering care and steadying hand of the Federal Government.

I believe it is necessary for the Government to deal justly, even generously, with our railroads. The plan contained in the bill which enables the roads to borrow funds from the Government during the transition period may be necessary and just, but if it is just to these great industrial interests that have been guaranteed and have received a profit every day during the war, it seems equally sound to me that some provision should be made for the millions of men who sacrificed so much in camps and on the battle fields during the war period. They, too, are passing through a transition period. They came back to us without funds and without work. Many of them found their places filled by other workers. Something should be done for them. This Congress has had before it a plan to provide farms and employment for these men for more than four months, but not a move has been made by those in responsibility here to enact such a law.

This measure now goes to the Senate, and I confidently hope that it will be improved in that body so that it may become a workable basis upon which the roads can be speedily returned to their owners under private control.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. EDWARD E. BROWNE,

OF WISCONSIN,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, October 22, 1919,

On the bill (H. R. 9822) to authorize the President of the United States to arrange and participate in an international conference to consider questions relating to international communications.

Mr. BROWNE. Mr. Speaker, the question of international communication is a very important matter—important not only to the United States but to all the civilized world. Public opinion is the most potent force to-day in determining the rights of conflicting interests. The importance of public opinion was manifested in the late World War by the millions of dollars expended by all the nations participating in sending out thousands of tons of literature to influence public opinion throughout the world in their favor. It is therefore important that we should have a public opinion founded upon the truth, upon facts and not fiction, an enlightened public opinion. The nations and news agencies that control the cables influence and direct public opinion and control the politics of the world.

WORLD NEWS AGENCIES.

There are four great news agencies that supply the world with news. They have divided the territory between them. The United States news agency is the Associated Press, which has the United States and its possessions, also Canada and Mexico. The English or Reuter News Agency has Great Britain, the British Colonies, except Canada. It also has all of China and Asia. The German, or Wolf Agency, the German Empire, central and northern Europe, the Slavic and Scandinavian countries. The Havas, or French News Agency, which has Latin Europe, the French possessions throughout the world, and Central and South America. All news from the United States goes to South America and Central America via Paris through the French or Havas News Agency. During the last year of the war the Associated Press of the United States, through the courtesy of the Havas or French News Agency, started a 3,000 words a day service to South America and supplied the American news to some twenty-odd South American newspapers. All American news that goes to China, Japan, or the Orient goes through the Reuter or English News Agency via London.

The Chinese have not in the past been a newspaper-reading people. The Chinese students have been attending our State universities and have told their people about America and our free institutions. We were surprised when China became a Republic. Many more surprises are in store. Newspapers have been established throughout China to the remotest corner. Within the next 15 or 20 years China is going to be a great newspaper-reading country. The sleeping giant of the Orient, with its 400,000,000 inhabitants, is awakening and is destined to play an important part in the world's affairs.

CHINA FEELS FRIENDLY TO THE UNITED STATES.

Chinese newspapers want to establish American news. It is very important that she get American news as affecting commercial relations, but much more important as affecting the peace of the world. If the newspapers of China do not get accurate American news, they will get meager, inaccurate news tending to prejudice us and help our commercial rivals.

Mr. Walter S. Rogers, who was special adviser to the peace commission at Paris on matters relating to international communications and who is a great authority on this question, testified before the Foreign Affairs Committee as follows:

Reuter, the English news agency, keeps a man in their principal office in New York City. He sends a budget of American news every day to London. The London agency makes a budget, which goes from London, with various stops, to India. In India the agency looks this news over and cuts it down and revises it and sends it on to Singapore; they take another crack at this and send it on to Hongkong. The Reuter newsman in Hongkong sends it to Shanghai, and from Shanghai it goes to Japan. Mr. Rogers said "I have talked with the man at the desk in Shanghai, and he said he had not the slightest idea what the original message looked like."

CABLES.

The importance of the question of international communication and the control of the cables in war as well as in peace was discussed at a meeting of the supreme war council in Paris early in March, and it was decided to have a conference to be participated in by the United States if this bill becomes a law. The great benefit to the United States arising from such a conference and the double benefit of having the conference held in Washington, where the United States delegates could have the best-informed experts of the world at their elbows for consultation, was recognized by the committee.

CONFLICT.

There is a conflict of opinion on the part of international lawyers as to the right of property in submarine cables in times of war. There were two cables connecting Germany with the United States at the beginning of the war. These cables were from Emden to the Azores and from the Azores to New York. Both were cut in the English Channel, and later one was diverted into Lands End, England. The end of the cable going into New York was cut and diverted to Halifax. The European end of the cable was diverted into Brest, France. The United States made a strong protest against this action, but to no avail. Another flagrant case was over the cable from Liberia to Brazil, both ends of this cable being in neutral countries, and the only means of communication between parts of South America and Africa. Because the cable in question was owned by a German company England claimed the right to cut it. Brazil and the other countries protested, but received no satisfaction.

INTERNATIONALIZATION OF CABLES.

The conference provided for by this bill will make rules and suggest plans for the internationalization of the cables. The information obtained and the suggestions made by the conference will be the basis for future treaties. It will be a great advantage to the United States to be able to send its news to all parts of the world without having it filtered through the news agencies of London, Paris, and Berlin.

SENATE SHOULD CONFIRM APPOINTMENT OF DELEGATES.

The only disagreement in the committee related to the provision in the bill requiring the Senate to confirm the appointment of delegates to this convention. The members of the committee of the same political faith as the President seem to think that the provision is especially directed to the present Executive, and yet the Democratic majority in the Sixty-second Congress passed the law which reads:

Hereafter the Executive shall not extend or accept any invitation to participate in any international congress, conference, or like event without first having specific authority of law to do so.

Mr. Taft, a Republican President, signed this bill, and in my opinion it is an excellent law.

PRECEDENTS.

Precedents are cited on both sides of the question. It should be remembered that before the law just referred to by me was passed Presidents of the United States could call international conferences without consulting Congress. Congress therefore often knew nothing about it until the conference was called and the delegates appointed. Evidently the law was passed because of an abuse on the part of the Presidents of the United States in calling such conferences. Presumably the law curtailing the President's powers in this respect was passed for some purpose, and I can not conceive of any other purpose. Notwithstanding the fact that there was no statute to compel John Adams, our second President, to ask the consent of Congress in these matters, in his message to the Senate in 1797 he asked that the Senate confirm the nomination of C. C. Pinckney, Francis Dana, and John Marshall, who were appointed to negotiate a treaty with the French Republic. The Senate confirmed two of the nominations and substituted Elbridge Gerry for Francis Dana.

President Jefferson submitted to the Senate January 11, 1803, for confirmation the nomination of James Monroe and Robert R. Livingston as commissioners with power to negotiate a treaty with France. President Madison, April 17, 1813, with the consent of the Senate appointed Albert Gallatin, James A. Bayard, and John Quincy Adams to negotiate a treaty with Great Britain. For other earlier precedents where our Presidents asked the Senate to confirm, see Executive Journal 1, pages 265, 310, 311, 432, 440; Journal 2, pages 25, 29.

It will be seen that our first Presidents, many of whom were learned constitutional lawyers, believed that the Senate of the United States should be consulted in international matters. Consequently, upon their own initiative, they presented the names of the men they nominated to the Senate for its confirmation.

On February 9, 1871, in the controversy with Great Britain over the fisheries question and claims known as the Alabama claims, President Grant nominated Hamilton Fish, Robert C. S. Schenck, Samuel Nelson, Ebenezer Hoar, and George H. Williams to act for the United States in this controversy. He sent their names to the Senate for confirmation. President Grant, the hero of the war and the most popular man in the United States, followed the precedent set by Washington, Adams, Jefferson, Madison, Monroe, and John Quincy Adams, and upon his own initiative sent the names of the commissioners to the Senate for confirmation.

Article II, section 2, of the Constitution of the United States, provides that the President—shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur; and he shall nominate, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint ambassadors, other public ministers, and consuls, judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers of the United States whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for and which shall be established by law; but the Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of departments.

Under the law of March 4, 1913, as interpreted by the Secretary of State, Mr. Lansing, the United States could not participate in the conference in any way without the authorization of Congress. See page 8 of report, Secretary of State Lansing's letter. If it was deemed proper to give Congress the right to say whether the United States should participate in conferences with foreign Governments, it certainly is in the discretion of Congress to say how the delegates to that conference shall be appointed. Congress, therefore, in its sound discretion provides in this bill that the two treaty-making branches of the Government shall participate. The President shall appoint the delegates, and the Senate shall be given the right to confirm or refuse to confirm the appointments.

This section of the Constitution contemplate that all appointive officers of the United States shall be appointed by the President of the United States, with the advice and consent of the Senate. The only exception it makes is that Congress can vest the appointment of such inferior officers as they think proper in the President alone.

POSTMASTERS NOT INFERIOR OFFICERS.

United States Revised Statutes, section 3830: "Every postmaster of the first, second, and third class shall be appointed and may be removed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate." The justness of this law, which has been on the statute books for many years, has never been questioned. Under it a postmaster in a town of a thousand inhabitants is not regarded as such an inferior officer as to dispense with the Senate's confirmation. Clearly the appointment of delegates contemplated in this bill, to take part in a great international conference involving the subject of international communication and the control and disposition of submarine cables, a conference whose findings will doubtless be embodied in a treaty with the leading powers of the world, are not inferior officers. If they are not inferior officers, then under Article II, section 2, of the Constitution they should be appointed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

USURPATION OF POWER.

From the beginning of civilization the executive branch of almost every Government has attempted to usurp the powers of the other coordinate branches of the Government, especially the legislative. One of the reasons is the fact that executive powers are exercised by one person while the legislative powers are divided up among many. As the result of the trenching of the executive upon the legislative, many legislative branches of Governments have degenerated into mere debating societies. I know of no instance in history of the people losing any of their liberties because the legislative branch usurped any of the powers of the executive branch of the Government.

EXECUTIVE POWER.

President Wilson's attitude toward Congress on the great question of declaring war and making treaties is entirely at variance with all of our earlier statesmen. The President on his own initiative and without consulting the Congress that was then in session sent our fleet to Mexico. When the fleet was well under way, so that to have recalled it would have made us the laughing stock of the world, the President asked the approval of Congress. Before the Senate had acted upon it our marines had landed, some of them had been killed, and a number of Mexicans had also been killed. A state of war practically existed. No one doubts that the same acts would have been equivalent to war if they had occurred toward any of the larger nations. The power to declare war was expressly and solely given to Congress by the Constitution.

Notwithstanding this express provision of the Constitution, President Wilson treats it as a mere perfunctory power of Congress, the real discretionary power being with the Executive. So in regard to that other great power, the right of the Senate, one of the treaty-making branches of the Government, to participate in the making of treaties, the President has wholly ignored the Senate in his negotiations in making the most important treaty in the world. He literally carried out the text in his book entitled "Constitutional Government in the United States," published in 1908. I quote from President Wilson as follows:

One of the greatest of the President's powers I have not yet spoken of at all—his control, which is very absolute, of the foreign relations of the Nation. The initiative in foreign affairs which the President possesses, without any restriction whatever, is virtually the power to control them absolutely. The President can not conclude a treaty with a foreign power without the consent of the Senate, but he may guide every step of diplomacy, and to guide diplomacy is to determine what treaties must be made if the faith and prestige of the Government are to be maintained. He need to disclose no step of negotiation until it is complete, and when in any critical matter it is completed the Government is virtually committed. Whatever its disinclination, the Senate may feel itself committed also.

HOW TO COERCE THE SENATE.

In a still earlier work entitled "Congressional Government," published by President Wilson in 1885, he tells how the Executive can coerce the Senate into acquiescence and can thus nullify an important part of the Constitution. How nearly President Wilson has carried out the suggestion made by him in his book, I quote his exact language and let the public judge.

His (the President's) only power of compelling compliance on the part of the Senate lies in his initiative in negotiations, which affords him a chance to get the country in such scrapes, so pledged in the view of the world to certain courses of action, that the Senate hesitates to bring about the appearance of dishonor which would follow its refusal to ratify the rash promises or to support the indiscreet threats of the Department of State.

Mr. Speaker, the Constitution provides that the President of the United States shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur.

Alexander Hamilton, fresh from the Constitutional Convention, pending ratification of the Constitution by the States, in a speech in New York, speaking of the danger of lodging with one man, the President of the United States, the Executive authority to make treaties and control foreign relations, said:

However proper and safe it may be in Governments where the executive magistrate is an hereditary monarch, to commit to him the entire power of making treaties, it would be utterly unsafe and improper to intrust that power to an elective magistrate of four years' duration.

Again he said:

The history of human conduct does not warrant that exalted opinion of human virtue which would make it wise in a nation to commit interests of so delicate and momentous a kind as those which concern its intercourse with the rest of the world to the sole disposal of a magistrate created and circumstanced as would be a President of the United States.

I have cited the attitude of our present Executive to show the danger of the Executive trenching on the powers of the legislative branch of the Government. No Executive who has a fair conception of the powers given to the other branches of the Government will be sensitive of a coordinate branch of the Government exercising the rights that are given by this bill—the right of the Senate to confirm or reject the President's appointees to this important international conference.

The Railroad Bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ALVAN T. FULLER,

OF MASSACHUSETTS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, November 17, 1919,

On the bill (H. R. 10453) to provide for the termination of Federal control of railroads and systems of transportation; to provide for the settlement of disputes between carriers and their employees; to further amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended, and for other purposes.

Mr. FULLER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, in voting for the passage of this bill I have in mind many telegrams and letters I have received from railroad men and from individuals in other walks of life who will hold me accountable for such action. Consequently I wish to place myself squarely on record as expressing as my humble opinion that the railroad bill, while far from perfect, is a substantial stride in the right direction. Government operation of railroads was born out of the exigencies of war conditions, by which it was justified.

The purpose of this bill is to provide a method of return and to prescribe rules of conduct as to how this shall be carried out. It would be a manifest impossibility to evolve a measure, not only in connection with the return of the railroads but in connection with any other equally important subject, that would be perfect or that would meet with unanimous approval. We can only perform our duty conscientiously and patriotically, keeping in mind that which is best for the welfare of our country.

I have been urged by important organizations in my State—Massachusetts—to vote for an extension of Government control over the railroads, and if I had had an opportunity I should have done so, as I am inclined to the belief that more time for the turning back of the railroads should have been given. I favor such governmental regulation and control as will secure and safeguard the rights and interests of the great American public, such regulation and control as will preclude exorbitant tariffs, either freight or passenger, and such regulation and control as will give the employees of the roads the rights, compensation, hours, and working conditions to which they are entitled. I shall vote for this bill because it provides a method of conciliation between the employer and the employee. While this bill does not attempt to prohibit or penalize strikes, if its provisions for the settlement of industrial disputes are observed and applied with proper intent and discretion there will be no strikes.

I believe the time is coming when we are going to have courts of arbitration with influence to make their decisions effective, which will render decisions as between employers and employees, just as we have at the present time courts to decide civil suits and difficulties of one kind or another far less important than the establishment of a proper relationship between the employer and his employees. I believe that if courts of this sort were established and merely rendered judgments and decisions, public opinion would make them effective.

Labor organizations on the one hand and the men who direct great industries, like the mines and rail systems, on the other have achieved a sort of power and influence that the general public can not regard without some misgivings, especially when it is apparent that differences like those existing in the coal fields are to be left to settlement by devastating trials of strength and methods of attrition applied to the country at large.

I have been urged to use my efforts in connection with this bill to defeat all antistrike legislation. My answer to all such requests has been that I certainly should not vote for any antistrike legislation at this time. In fact I voted for the Anderson amendment, which I believe should meet with the approval of every patriotic labor man. Collective bargaining on the part of employees has come to stay. All fair-minded, thinking men in this country know that the great advance in the conditions of labor and in the hours of labor has been gained largely by the unions.

Strikes and lockouts do not assure justice to anybody. They give victory and advantage only to the strongest. The wrongs and grievances that may animate one side or the other are never intelligently scrutinized. It is no wonder that we have begun to talk of industrial barbarism.

Congress, for the benefit of the country and its safety, will have to set up a new code of industrial relationship and define new moral and legal principles which labor or capital may not violate in the future without inviting public condemnation and disgrace. Then we shall be rid of strikes. The accident of poverty will not serve to weaken the case of men who strive for living wages and the right to care decently for their children. Nor will fanatical agitators again find it possible to threaten the industrial life of the country with disorganization and paralysis. The agents of the red flag and Bolshevism are seeking to take advantage of our industrial unrest. We are facing a critical period. Every true, patriotic American citizen—capitalist or laboring man—will stand firm as the rock of Gibraltar for American principles and American institutions.

I believe that the laboring man is as worthy of his hire to-day as when that great principle was originally enunciated. I believe that there is no greater virtue in this life than human labor. The laboring man—organized or unorganized—is the salt of the earth. He is the bone and sinew of the country. The test of his loyalty is recorded in Flanders fields as well as on the Liberty bond and war-savings stamp records of the Treasury Department.

The Nation's Martyrs—All Who Sacrificed for the Future.

Sergt. Harold Rumberger decorated with Italian War Cross by Hon. BENJAMIN K. FOCHT, at Waynesboro, Pa., November 11, 1919, on the occasion of the anniversary of the armistice, being the third citation conferred upon this soldier for unusual bravery in action.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. BENJAMIN K. FOCHT,

OF PENNSYLVANIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, November 11, 1919.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I insert the following extracts from the account published in the daily press of Waynesboro, Pa., of the proceedings attending the presentation of the Italian War Cross to Sergt. Harold Rumberger for heroic service on the battle field, together with an address, in part, delivered by myself on the occasion:

CITATION BY ADJUTANT GENERAL OF UNITED STATES ARMY—SERGT. RUMBERGER, COMPANY B.

During the afternoon of September 26 the advance of part of the line of the First Battalion, Three hundred and sixteenth, was held up by fire from machine-gun nests from third woods. It was almost impossible to locate these nests.

Sergt. Rumberger went forward alone against the machine-gun nests on the left of the road, and finding that he could make no headway against it with his rifle, he returned and, procuring an automatic rifle, went forward a second time and, on flanking the nest, shot the German gunners and wiped out the nest, thus permitting the line to advance. A slight wound in the face did not prevent Sergt. Rumberger from finishing the dangerous and difficult task he had undertaken.

Sergt. Rumberger is recommended for the Distinguished Service Cross for distinguished conduct and fearless personal bravery.

The Distinguished Service Cross was awarded Sergt. Harold P. Rumberger on December 13, 1918, and presented at Leurville, France, by Gen. Pershing; the French Croix de Guerre was awarded him April 23, 1919, and presented at Camp Dix by Gen. Kuhn; the Italian War Cross was awarded June 20, 1919, and was to have been presented by Prince Alliatto, Italian chargé d'affaires, Washington, D. C., but on account of his absence attending the funeral of the late Italian ambassador, Congressman BENJAMIN K. FOCHT, representing the seventeenth Pennsylvania district, was deputed to perform the service, which occurred at the Waynesboro, Pa., opera house, November 11, 1919.

The home-coming welcome given the soldiers and service men and women of the World War occurred in the Arcade Opera House and was an event arranged to honor the soldiers and sailors of all our wars. On this occasion, which was participated in by all the soldiers and ministers of the town, as well as officials and many prominent citizens, Congressman FOCHT presented Sergt. Harold Rumberger with an Italian war medal of merit, being the third medal which this soldier has received in recognition of his heroic deeds at the battle front in Europe.

CONGRESSMAN BENJAMIN K. FOCHT'S ADDRESS.

This is an inspiring occasion, and its meaning should give all who are here a real American thrill.

The uniform of a soldier carries with it a significance which we can better translate than ever before.

Soldiers from Waynesboro and Franklin County and Pennsylvania have become synonymous with courage, and wherever they have fought in the annals of war victory has immortalized their swords, for history has written our every cause just and righteous and for principles and not greed.

The time will come when the universe will realize, as it can not now, what you did for the honor of our own country and in rescuing millions from the heel of oppression. The undying gratitude of posterity will be yours, while for to-day and while you live you will be regarded not as other men but apart from them.

It may be a long time before a war-torn world can again be altogether serene and complacent and function even in the way that was normal before the shock came that seemed to tear down the battlements of the universe and threaten the eclipse of civilization. It could not be expected that we are to very quickly emerge from the maelstrom of bursting shells and deadly gases and thundering guns and tears and sorrow of broken hearts, all as pitiful as the wail of a lost soul. Yet above all that depresses and casts down and overshadows with gloom victory for humanity rises triumphant, and out of the confusion and chaos and that which seems to be in conflict with our cherished religion itself we may draw that which is good for the soul.

As the agony of the cross was in atonement for the sins of the world and pointed the way to earthly peace and ultimate redemption, the sacrifices made by the soldiers who left the endearments of home to cross the seas have sealed for us for all time the guaranty of our liberties and placed all humanity under obligations to you for your unexampled free gift of blood and treasure that other men may be safe and free and may forever walk the paths of peace. The great compensating force must bring a final adjustment for America which will make the goddess more than ever ablaze with glory among men and typify that justice and equality and righteousness which constitute the attributes of a Nation whose transcendent aim is liberty and happiness.

Little things have had their influence upon the destinies of nations and of the world. If the cackling of geese aroused the sleeping Roman sentinel and saved the empire, it was truly a very little thing. It was a small occurrence, but mighty in its consequences, when a wounded soldier walking in the suburbs of Washington came within the lines of Gen. Early, whose troops were enveloping the Capital and threatening its capture, with President Lincoln and his Cabinet, and when questioned by Confederate officers as to the number of Union forces in the city, replied that there were 50,000 and more coming, when not 5,000 could have been marshaled that day. Early was thus turned from his purpose and lost the opportunity of the Civil War by these few words of a sick and crippled soldier. In the Black Forest when Marshal Grouchy inquired of a peasant standing at the forks of a road which way to take to reach Waterloo and a nod of the head sent him in the wrong direction, in the evening of that day instead of Grouchy arriving to press Napoleon's victory over Wellington, the bugles of Blucher were heard, and the consequences are better described by Victor Hugo in his immortal "Les Misérables." But the nod of a peasant made a new map of Europe.

Off in a corner of Europe in the mysterious, veiled Balkans, a single pistol shot rang out a few years ago, and there fell dead the crown prince of Austria. A pistol shot and a dead man ordinarily constitute a trifling incident in a section that for centuries has been stained by the blood of assassination. But that single shot set in motion the mightiest armies of all time. All the power of Europe was assembled and would have been exhausted in the conflagration thus started in a little way had it not been extinguished by the unparalleled heroism of American soldiers.

That heroism we are in Waynesboro to-day to honor. We are here to let those who turned the tide of oncoming and victorious autocracy to defeat know that their fame is fadeless, and that for their dead comrades sleeping in hallowed ground on another continent there will be bright memory and love while liberty survives and men and women are safe.

Like the men who framed the sure foundation of this Nation, and those who sustained the Constitution in the great civil strife from '61 to '65, you were martyrs for a living, burning principle which required the highest worth of men to sustain—a willingness to die that others might live and be free in the future. We can not too often repeat what Lincoln said on the battle field of Gettysburg: "We are now testing whether a nation so conceived and so dedicated may anywhere long endure." Our Civil War was the test of the ages, for if men could not be safe and free here there was no hope for men anywhere. All of the burning hope of centuries and the tears and blood and sorrow of all time centered right there in that test, and, thanks to God for their sturdy purpose, the veterans of the Civil War never sounded a retreat from that sacred principle until 3,000,000 shackles had been melted and the Union forged together forever by the fires of war.

America was whole-hearted in this World War. When the Nation stripped for action women wove and spun; the Red Cross, the world's great mother, never relaxed in the mighty work; bankers bought bonds and the masses bought more bonds; even the little children contributed from their small savings banks. The farmers were foremost and never flinched when the Government called for their boys and fixed the price of their products. Mechanics and laboring men all helped and contributed, while the ministers of the gospel made patriotism the text of every sermon. Physicians did at home the work of the surgeons who went to the front, while the railroads and every branch of industry labored on overtime to the glorious end.

In the men who crossed the seas for a principle we see reflected the spirit of the men of all other wars which we have fought, and every one has been above and beyond any thought of conquest or aggrandizement. Yours was martyrdom, for you sought nothing for yourselves, but you had within your hearts the high and ennobling purpose of defending America's honor and extending freedom to those who have been held subject to the damnable system of inherited rights and privileges and entailments. Your sacrifices, therefore, constitute true martyrdom, for no men would willingly suffer the torture which you endured unless sustained by the consciousness that you were supporting and redeeming a principle which was just and right before God and man.

Ministers of the gospel are martyrs, as are all men who sacrifice and build for the future. On account of their mental development, self-sacrificing zeal, and inurement to self-denial, I could take any minister of the gospel who sits upon this stage to-day and quickly show him how he could legitimately earn three times his present salary. They are dedicated to righteousness, and as leaders and teachers of men and women are sharers in the infinite.

From the day Columbia called and the goddess would not be denied by the sons of the noble sires of this beautiful town and vicinity, we followed you with affectionate devotion, and now, with unspeakable joy and exultation, we hail you and your glorious achievement in this hour of supreme national pride.

It may be that we sometimes regard rather lightly our birthright and are misled as to the kind of country we have and the blessings we enjoy. We have heard men belittle our Constitution, and the theories of free government promulgated by Washington, Jefferson, Franklin, and Hamilton as worn out and effete, and even go so far as to acclaim England a country where there is more liberty than in these United States. In the first place, let us not forget that Americans are citizens and sovereigns. In monarchies, limited or otherwise, the inhabitants are subjects, and therefore any man who is a subject must accept sovereignty to be centralized and vested in the monarch; hence he is somewhat a slave since he can not be a citizen. Here every man is a sovereign, and so much so that he can not surrender that God-given blessing, excepting for a short time as he transfers it to his representative for a given tenure, when it is returned to be redelegated. Notwithstanding the hopes centered in the French Revolution and the readiness with which the unthinking accept the results of that bloody period as of vast benefit to humanity, it was mostly counterfeit. To my mind, what Europe has since had by way of liberty is nothing short of spurious, for while every country has a parliament, they are all little else than places where a few men, under the false belief that they are representatives, may talk. Talk, that is all, in England as well as in continental Europe, for the election of members of Parliament is generally a frame up, and they do not formulate and present legislation as in our Congress. That is done by a ministry appointed by the King, who also appoints the speaker of Parliament and negotiates and signs all treaties for all divisions of the Empire, including Canada. Here in America two branches of the Government must approve a treaty, the executive and legislative, and it is being shown at this very moment that it is well for us and our future that it is so.

We must realize and do appreciate the fact that there is no such country as this on earth, and there never was. The statesmen and philosophers during all the centuries of boasted European civilization fell far short of accomplishing what our forefathers planned for us in our Constitution. The last effort to hold together the tottering, tinselled thrones was the scheme of royal intermarriage; but that has been wrecked because it was not founded on justice but on selfishness. The many continued to remain poor and always subjects, and the few rich and powerful.

The call from Europe for help was a proud day for every American, and the fact that such a ready response was given adds everlasting glory to the Republic. And crowning all that with victory achieved by American arms makes this armistice-day anniversary one of triumph and puts upon England and France an obligation to the United States which can never be paid. And these nations owe a duty to humanity which God will see that they discharge. Their sacred pledges given before Congress and the Nation and High Heaven were that the war was to destroy autocracy and place democracy in the sun. When the European representatives came here with their pledges, solemnly given before Congress, we felt that a new birth had been given humanity, a birth of freedom which so few had ever known. Will these pledges be redeemed? Will men everywhere be made safe and free; will they be made sovereign and citizens instead of subjects? Will kings lay aside their false robes of divine right, and will the nobility give back the land and property they have for so many centuries held under unjust entailment laws? The world will watch and hope, and, under Divine guidance, let us feel that the oppressed will come into their own as we did.

There was attached to that call for help added significance. It was a vindication of our form of government. It justified every hope of our fathers and sanctified their memories with a halo that shall ever be luminous. It proved this Government to be every inch of benevolence and Christianity any American ever claimed for it, while the heroism of our soldiers caused a complete revision of the future war plans of the world. The war disclosed the weaknesses and chicanery of many other nations, while it proved our prowess and giant strength as well as supreme unselfishness.

Monarchy's attempted justification has been on the theory that with a strong central government the resources of a nation can be more readily commanded, assembled, and hurled against an invading foe. The fallacy of all this was shown by the marvelous manner in which America transported more than 2,000,000 men across 3,000 miles of ocean, in the presence of which the history of ancient warfare sinks into insignificance.

From the ashes of the royal nabob spurious article, which discloses the King of England to be half German and the ex-Kaiser half English, and the late Czar of Russia their cousin, the former King of Greece the Kaiser's brother-in-law, and virtually all of the former and present crowned heads, including the King and Queen of Belgium, related by blood or marriage, must come the voice of the people, sovereign people, if one of our great objects in going to Europe to fight is to be attained. Self-determination and self-government must be the fitting slogan for men who want to be free from the oppression of the degenerate royal bosses.

And the signs of the times are ominous. Out of all this confusion and discord, woe, and death will come a social and economic regeneration of the world. Following this stupendous war for democracy there must be given an opportunity for the free flow of democratic spirit without any such outrages and hopeless repression as are set forth in article 10 of the league of nations. That section would thwart and nullify the very object of the war—the opportunity for self-determination. Secret treaties which carved up Europe before we reached the scene of conflict did not constitute the inducement which sent America's invincible legions to the rescue of perishing France and England. We went because our rights had been trampled upon, and to give the world wider liberty, and not to tighten the bonds of monarchy around the necks of people who might wish to set up their own free governments. And we fought that there might be no more wars, hence instead of force being expressed throughout, why would not disarmament be the best kind of league conceivable? Certainly our first covenant is our own Constitution, while no man will deny that what George Washington said in his Farewell Address sounds miles deeper than all that was said and done at the recent peace conference.

It could be nothing less than ignorance, blind folly, and an ignoble surrender of our sovereignty and independence to accept the combination treaty and covenant in the form sent here by Europeans for American sanction.

Now, briefly, what of the future?

We read of a man who, when he went to Congress in 1852, lamented the fact that he had arrived on the scene too late, that there was nothing more to do. He figured that the slavery question had been settled by the Missouri Compromise; that the banking system was good enough; and the canals and railroads had sufficiently developed to meet the requirements of transportation, while being an agricultural people the tariff could never again be an issue as it had been in 1842.

This Congressman saw the Civil War, which settled right and forever both slavery and secession; he aided in reconstruction; voted for the homestead law; saw the resumption of specie payment; the country put on a gold basis; and the canals and early railroads superseded by flying express train, flying machines, and the efficiency of the automobile, telephone, and wireless; a war fought with Spain; then the Kaiser humbled and tumbled from his throne and the world dazzled by the unexampled heroism of our soldiers.

And there may be those who believe that there is now nothing more for us to do. But there is much to do. Let us in this new economic and social evolution strive to drive poverty and misery out of the constituted State organism. No man with a compassionate heart wants to see his neighbor fall short of the possession of those things which are necessary for his comfort; and unless the man having a family is given the opportunity to educate and care for his children and start them on their way in life on a self-sustaining basis, then the pillars of the Nation's future strength are weakened and may crumble to fragments. But in the new balancing and readjusting there will come a more equal division of the rewards of industry. It will be accomplished not through the agency of force nor the fallacious theories of socialism, which are erratic and lead to nowhere.

Labor will be more adequately compensated and prices for commodities will not again see former low levels. But while labor is going to fare better, the railroad and the factory must have an income showing adequate profit or the medium through which the wage of the mechanic and laborer flows is shut off, while there must be shown due deference to the public by both, for from the public is drawn the sustaining power for energizing capital and giving employment to labor. These questions are purely social and not political and demand that neither mob nor trust shall rule. The evolution must be kept within the safety zone while moderate paternalism is allowed to function without destroying initiative and making men idlers with imbibed Bolsheviki theories, which can only lead to anarchy, which is the grave of liberty.

War is brutal, but to save our liberty and carry the message of freedom to others we had to engage in it. Stupendous and shocking as this war was, after all it was merely giant white caps rolling and churning and dissolving over the unchanging gulf stream of destiny, for "eternal wisdom alone marshals the great procession of nations."

But the object of the war being in part to remove the element of plunder, therefore with plunder eliminated there should be few wars. Freedom must everywhere now walk the earth, for no people would again vote away their sovereignty and vest the cherished hope of the soul in a despot.

You drew back a curtain that revealed to the world something that was not credited before. Amazed men saw the goddess with flaming sword in one hand and the other extended in Christian helpfulness and forgiveness. It was new to them to know a hand that was powerful enough to strike dismay among oppressors and not accompany this power with greed and lust. This fixes a new standard, and to you we bestow full credit. You revealed a new civilization, and the debt we and the world owe you can only be repaid by the coming generations standing in defense of constitutional liberty and vouchsafing to all men and women the most cherished and prized boon short of the promised and accepted immortality of the soul—human liberty.

You, my soldier friends, must accept the gratitude of a world saved from destruction. Not only here, but everywhere, posterity will sing your praises. Beyond the seas, where men are to enjoy freedom who never enjoyed it before, during all the ages that men live as freemen, will there descend upon you the benediction of grateful hearts.

Thanks to you veterans of all our wars, every child must now feel in his little heart that our country belongs to the centuries, to the coming ages of all time, and against the world for honor and liberty we will back it.

This is Lincoln's country, "by and of and for the people," and may God spare it to be forever by Americans, and never by any such artificial cloak or subterfuge called a covenant may we be inveigled into surrendering our independence and sovereignty to imperialistic foreigners.

SPEECH

HON. HENRY D. FLOOD,

OF VIRGINIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, October 22, 1919.

The House in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9822) to authorize the President of the United States to arrange and participate in an international conference to consider questions relating to international communication.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I really feel that this is a good measure and that it ought to pass the House. It has in it much of future good for this country, and I regret to see it hampered by this amendment, which this entire debate on the other side shows was put on here not for any good purpose but simply as a criticism and an insult to the President of the United States. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. LAYTON. That is what he needs.

Mr. FLOOD. That is what he needs, says my Republican friend here. That is the reason the people of this country will justify every word the President of the United States said when he wrote a letter in 1918 asking the people not to send such a Congress to Washington. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. FLOOD. Sit down. When a man gets upon the floor of this House and says that his purpose is to insult the President of the United States, and that is what he needs, he shall not interrupt me.

Now, Mr. Chairman, every Member of this House, on that side as well as on this side, knows that this proposition is not one that they can constitutionally justify. There is not a single man over there that believes this proposition is constitutional.

I credit every Member of Congress with intelligence enough to believe that he knows that the executive functions in dealing with our foreign relations belong to the executive department of this Government, uncontrolled and uncontrollable by any other branch of the Government. You know it is not constitutional. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] said that the only question is whether these are officers. It has been decided from Hamilton, all the way down, that they are not officers. No one has contended in the American Congress before to-day that these delegates are officers.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. FLOOD. You can not interrupt me.

Mr. LAYTON. You do not want to be.

Mr. FLOOD. I do not want to be interrupted by a man who will make such a statement as you made about the President of the United States on the floor of this House. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

Mr. FLOOD. There is no question in the mind——

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TILSON. It is that the gentleman from Virginia is violating the rules of the House in referring to another Member in the second person.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is well taken. The Chair trusts that the offense will not be repeated.

Mr. BEE. The gentleman from Delaware [Mr. LAYTON], too, violated the proprieties when he made that statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is out of order.

Mr. FLOOD. That is a very technical question of order. That becomes the Republicans in this House. That characterizes all the points they raise and all the legislation they enact.

You know it is not constitutional. You know it is not an office. Nobody ever contended before that these delegates were officers. Roosevelt acted upon this theory, so did McKinley, so did Lincoln, so did Grant, so did all the great Democratic Presidents. Sometimes the Senate has questioned the right to make these appointments without its concurrence, but every time the question has been raised it has been decided in favor of the President. The Constitution fixes it. The precedents establish the right of the President, and there can be no worthy reason for bringing this amendment in here.

It ought to be voted down. It has no place in this House. It will bring no credit to the Republican Party. It brings into the reports of the Foreign Affairs Committee of this House an element of partisanship that I have never seen in that committee during my sixteen years of service upon it.

Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment will be voted down, so that we shall have an opportunity to vote for this measure. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Congress has done little enough since it assembled on May 19 to commend itself to the country. It should not play 1920 politics in trifling matters. In the five months we have been in session not a solitary measure of reconstruction has been enacted into law. The Army and the Navy have been demobilized by the President. Everything that he could do to put the country on a peace basis has been done, but where legislation was required nothing has been accomplished. Politics is uppermost in the minds of the Republican leaders; the good of the country is a minor consideration.

Five months ago the United States was the recognized political, economic, and financial leader of the world. The prestige we have lost since that time has been due to the incompetency and narrow partisanship of Congress.

The enactment of such legislation as this is beyond the power of Congress. We have nothing whatever to do with our foreign intercourses and relations, and Congress has no power to confer upon the Senate any power over such intercourse and relations, and the Senate has no power over such intercourse and relations save its constitutional function to advise and consent to the making of treaties and its advice and consent to the appointment of ambassadors, public ministers, and consuls. The representatives provided for by the pending bill are not ambassadors, public ministers, or consuls, but are simply delegates to be appointed to an international conference, to confer with delegates from other countries in reference to our foreign relations. So far as those relations are concerned, except in the instances I have just mentioned, the President has absolute and uncontrolled and uncontrollable authority. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. EVAN J. JONES,

OF PENNSYLVANIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, November 17, 1919.

Mr. JONES of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I have concluded to vote for this bill, although, in my opinion, it has been seriously weakened in a number of respects as an efficient piece of railroad legislation. I voted against the so-called Denison amendment, being amendment to section 205 of the bill under the caption "Refunding of carriers' indebtedness to the United States." I can understand how an appeal would reflect favorably on this House of a set-off; that is, if the Government owed the carriers a certain sum of money and the carriers in turn owed the Government a certain sum of money, that in the settlement of the mutual accounts it seems fair and equitable that the one should be placed as a set-off to the collection of the other.

But in reaching this conclusion they forget that there is a very marked distinction between the analogies. In the first place, if "A" owes "B" $200, it is because of a contractual relationship or bargain that "A" and "B" entered into, the result of which "A" becomes indebted to "B" by a definite and distinct understanding and agreement, and if "B" owes "A" a certain sum of money it likewise has grown out of a contractual or mutual understanding and agreement, so that when they come to settle their accounts there is a contractual relationship or agreement whereby "A" promises to pay "B" what he owes him and "B" promises to pay "A" what he owes him, thus a set-off is proper.

In the case of the railroads the Government took over these railroads without the consent or approval of the carriers. They operated them according to the ideas of the Director General of Railroads acting under the President. The Director General of Railroads saw fit, without asking the consent of the carriers, without a resolution of the board of directors of the carriers, to expend a certain amount of money in the extension of roads and betterments. This extension and betterments were distributed among various roads. It was not under any contractual arrangement or agreement with the carriers. It was ex parte. The Railroad Administration did it of its own volition. The executives of the carriers had nothing to say about it; possibly gave no counsel in the matter. That presents an entirely different proposition than "I O U" and "U O Me."

Now, the railroads are given back to the owners and the Government comes in and says to the executives of these various railroads: "The Government expended for your road for betterments and extensions certain sums of money, and under section 7 of the standard contract, which was entered into between the Railroad Administration and the carrier, the Government owes the carrier a certain sum of money; therefore (under the Denison amendment, if it becomes a law) the Government offsets what it owes the carrier under its contract, created under a positive and definite agreement, against the amount that the railroad expended for betterments and extensions without any contractual arrangement or agreement."

In my opinion the only fair thing to do is for the Government to pay the debt it contracted to pay and allow the carriers the same length of time to repay the Government the money expended for extensions and betterments that the carrier itself would take in a sale of securities for money to make these same betterments and extensions. That is only putting the railroads in statu quo. They have a right to expect it and a right to demand it.

It must be conceded that the expenditures by railroad companies for extensions and betterments does not come out of current revenue but is always made from proceeds of securities, and the carriers are the best judges, in order not to cripple and demoralize transportation, to determine how they should issue those securities, the terms and conditions of them, as well as their redemption. I am fearful that if the Denison amendment becomes a part of the law railroad corporations will be seriously embarrassed, many carriers will not be able to finance themselves, railroad securities will not be stable enough to give credit sufficient to meet the exigencies of the case, and the courts will be full of applications for receivers.

I also voted against the so-called Anderson amendment. This amends Title III of the act. In my opinion it would be better if Title III were eliminated from the act than to have the Anderson amendment in it. It means nothing in my opinion. It can not do anything more than create criticism, and it certainly is not definite as a positive, conclusive method of settling disputes between the carriers and their employees. In private altercations arbitration is not uncommon. In contracts between parties arbitration clauses are often inserted in the contracts, the arbitrators are named, and the parties agree to abide by their decision. There is something definite about that form of arbitration. It is a voluntary arbitration. The parties agree to it as a matter of expediency. In the Anderson amendment there is a voluntary arbitration, but if the parties go into it prejudiced, if either side is prejudiced, there can be no hope for a solution or a compromise, and when you are through you are just where you started. There is, in my mind, a vast difference between a local labor trouble and a national labor trouble.

Local strikes of some industrial plant like the strike in the textile factories in New England, while serious, is not of such a character that affects the individual life throughout the length and breadth of the United States. Neither is a strike of miners in a certain one section of the coal field of such a character that its effect is felt in the individual life throughout the United States. The same is true of a strike by employees of some one railroad, but when all the employees of all the industries strike, or when all the miners in all the fields strike, or when all the employees of all the transportation systems strike, then it is a public calamity, and I believe such a strike should not only be declared unlawful, but there should be an industrial court established to hear the testimony, see the argument handed down, and finally with a power to enforce its decree.

When both the Anderson and the Dennison amendments were adopted I was constrained to vote against the passage of the bill and would have voted against the passage were it not for this one fact, viz, that the President has declared, if the press correctly reports him, that the railroads are going back to their private owners on January 1. If this is done and there is not some form of legislation protecting the carriers a chaotic condition will exist, for the carriers will go back on a status quo relationship as to rates and tariffs, or, in other words, as to income, and the present condition as to wages, or, in other words, expenses, and that would be confiscatory of railroad properties. It could result in nothing more or less than the Government again taking over the railroads in order to insure transportation to the people.

The Railroad Bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. EDWARD E. BROWNE,
OF WISCONSIN,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, November 17, 1919,

On the bill (H. R. 10453) to provide for the termination of Federal control of railroads and systems of transportation; to provide for the settlement of disputes between carriers and their employees; to further amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended, and for other purposes.

Mr. BROWNE. Mr. Speaker, the bill presented by the committee which has been discussed in this House for six days has been amended in several particulars and in my opinion greatly improved. The adoption of the Anderson or Sweet amendment, in my opinion, strengthens the bill.

UNFAIR TO LABOR.

I believe that the plan of arbitration provided by section 316 (c) of this bill penalizing innocent employees in one part of the country for the failure of employees in another part of the country to meet their obligations is unfair in the extreme. For instance, if the engineers in the State of New York should strike, the funds of the organization of engineers in Wisconsin and every other State in the Union would be liable for damages resulting to the railroad companies in the State of New York. A nonunion employee of the same railroad company in Wisconsin, although as much responsible for the strike as the employee who chanced to be a member of the union, both equally innocent, would not be penalized. I believe that this provision, besides being unjust, would tend to keep men out of the unions and prevent them from enjoying the rights that every American citizen should have, the right of becoming a member of a labor organization or not, as he sees fit. I therefore support the Anderson amendment which provides a fair and just way of arbitrating disputes between the railroads and their employees.

WEBSTER AMENDMENT.

I have no sympathy with the proposed Webster amendment, which, in a similar case to the one I have cited, would not only make the funds of the engineer in Wisconsin liable because of a strike that perhaps he voted against but would make his individual property liable for damages.

SENATE BILL.

I have no sympathy with the provisions of the Cummins bill, which provides fine and imprisonment against a man or aggregation of men who claim their God-given, and I believe constitutional, right of choosing the kind of employment they wish to work at, the employer they wish to work for, and the right to stop work when they want to. The employer of labor has these rights. He can employ union labor or nonunion labor. He can employ whomsoever he wants, with the right of discharging an employee when he desires, and no legislative body has ever attempted to take away from the employer this right.

NO JUSTIFICATION FOR DRASTIC PROVISIONS REGARDING LABOR.

I firmly believe in arbitration and mediation of all labor disputes between capital and labor. The first law providing for arbitration was known as the Erdman Act. This act was amended by what is known as the Newlands amendment. These laws provided for a conciliation board in cases where the railroads and employees could not agree. For 23 years before the Government took over the railroads all grievances that could not be settled by the grievance court of the employers and employees of the railroad companies were settled by the conciliation board. There were no strikes on the railroads during that time.

During the 23 years mentioned there has never been a single case where the employees refused to abide by the decision of the mediation board. This certainly is a record that justifies my belief that there is no need for the drastic legislation suggested in the Cummins bill or the Webster amendment, even if such legislation were constitutional.

GUARANTY PROVISION OF THE BILL.

I am against the guaranty provisions of this bill. I believe that it is not only unfair but that the principle of granting a subsidy to a private corporation is vicious and indefensible.

Section 207 (B) of this bill provides that—

The United States hereby guarantees to each carrier that its railway operating income for the guaranty period as a whole shall not be less than the average of its railway operating income for the three corresponding periods of six months each during the test period.

The bill also specifies how the computing railway operating income shall be ascertained. In general, it provides that every railroad company shall be guaranteed by the Government in its earnings an amount equal to the average amount that it received the three years preceding our entrance into the war, this guarantee to last six months after the railroads are turned back to their owners.

It should be remembered that the three fiscal years preceding our entrance into the war, 1914, 1915, 1916, ending June 30, 1917, were years when railroads did the largest and most profitable business in their entire history. Under this provision of the bill a railroad company has a right to retain as much of its income as it receives over the amount of the guaranty, no matter if it should make 25 or 30 per cent profit on its investment. If any railroad company does not make as great a profit as its average profits in the three prosperous years mentioned, which were unusual years on account of our great export trade with Europe, which was stimulated by the war, then the United States will be obliged to tax the people to make up the deficiency.

Chief Justice Ryan, one of Wisconsin's greatest judges, in writing a decision of the Supreme Court of Wisconsin in an important railroad case, spoke of the railroads as the "petted children of legislation." If we single out the railroad companies and give them subsidies, discriminating in their favor over other great public utilities, we can very justly say that they are the petted children of legislation. It should also be borne in mind that when the railroads are returned to their owners the same increases in passenger and freight rates will be enforced that were made during the war. Everybody knows that it was necessarily more expensive to run the railroads during the war, and the profits very much less, than it was in times of peace, for the reason that certain kinds of freight that the companies could have carried profitably had to be refused and all freight had to give way to the shipment of munitions of war. If the railroad companies, with the increased freight and passenger rates given them during the war, which they are allowed by this bill to retain, can not maintain themselves and make a reasonable return on the money actually invested as represented by the value of the roads minus any stock that may be watered or not, based upon actual value, it will show inefficient management, which will be followed by governmental ownership. If the Government is to guarantee that the railroads make the largest profits that they have ever made in their entire existence and take the whole risk, then the Government, in all fairness, ought to at least have the chance of making the profits over and above the guaranty.

ENORMOUS INCREASE OF BUSINESS.

All of Europe will have to be rehabilitated, many parts of it entirely rebuilt. Our export trade is now reaching proportions that have never been reached in the history of the country. In all statements of the banks and financial institutions of the country they predict an era of the greatest exportation abroad of manufactured goods, farm products, and raw material that we have ever experienced. Passenger traffic and freight traffic at the present time is unprecedented and is taxing the resources of every railroad company in the United States in meeting the demands of shippers. Why then should the Government guarantee that the railroads make the large profits which this bill contemplates? It would tend to encourage extravagance in management and discourage initiative and self-reliance, and the guaranty would undoubtedly become permanent.

CAN PROFIT BY GOVERNMENT EXPERIENCE.

In the brief period that the Government has operated the railroads the Government has established many economies. In the period from July to November, 1918, 135,000 more cars of grain were handled than in the same months of 1917. During the first 10 months of 1918 an increase of 37,083,300 tons of coal was handled over the corresponding months in 1917.

ECONOMIES.

Unification of terminals, stations, and reductions in organization as contrasted with the same under private control show great saving.

The northwestern region for the year 1918 shows savings of $34,233,282.

The central western region shows savings of $25,811,512.
The southwestern region shows savings of $9,730,833.
The Pocahontas region shows savings of $2,336,945.
The Allegheny region shows savings of $15,110,260.
The southern region shows savings of $7,975,915.
The reports for 1919 will without doubt show greater economies.

ACCIDENTS REDUCED.

In the matter of safety, accidents were reduced very materially. The Government created what was known as a Committee of Safety, and studied all safety appliances and adopted the use of all that were practical. There were 1,389 fewer persons killed in the first seven months of 1919 than in the first seven months of 1918, and there were 22,106 fewer persons injured during the same period. During those seven months of 1919, 115,665 dangerous conditions were abolished through the efforts of the safety section. Note the contrast with this management and the former private management of the railroads. The attitude of railroads as to accidents can be seen by the men who speak for them.

Charles J. Faulkner, counsel for the railroad companies operating 227,000 miles of railroad lines, opposed any kind of legislation for safety appliances. He testified before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House in 1914, when the safety on railroads bill was under consideration, that it was utterly impossible to regulate safety by statutory rules, and that in any case it was unwise for Congress to require the adoption of any device until it was proved to be safe and a practical appliance. In other words, he would not try a device to see if it was good, and it would be impossible to prove it was good without trying it.

W. J. Eck, signal engineer for the Southern Railroad, at the same hearing testified as to the high cost of putting in automatic signals. When asked if such action would save human lives he said: "There is without doubt a saving due to putting in automatic signals, due to the fact that wrecks and fatalities are prevented, but it is a saving you can not capitalize in any way."

NEED NO GUARANTY.

It is inconceivable that the railroads will need a guaranty from the Government with the increased business, increased rates, and the savings that will accrue from the unification of the terminals, stations, and reduction in organization, and other economies that have been suggested and put into effect during governmental control.

PROPAGANDA.

The railroads and those interested in their stocks and bonds have flooded the country with literature reciting how badly the railroads have been treated by the Interstate Commerce Commission and Congress and the legislatures of the several States; that the railroads have been starved. Many of the stockholders of the railroads believe this to be true. I challenge anyone to show any decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission, any act of Congress or the State legislatures that will justify any such statement.

The J. P. Morgan Co. and other great financial interests have exploited many of the railroads. The New Haven, the Rock Island, Frisco, and Pere Marquette are recent examples of those who had the control of railroads squeezing out the small stockholders and exploiting the roads and making millions of dollars. There are hundreds of these cases that could be cited. They used to call this high finance, but now they are beginning to call it by the correct name—plain robbery—and making those responsible liable criminally. The same interests that exploited many of the railroads are now in control of practically all the railroads of the country. They have abandoned the bold course practices formerly used and are resorting to more refined methods and practices. The program that they intend to follow in the near future is first to ask for increased rates; second, make it necessary for some of the weaker roads to be thrown into the hands of receivers and then point to them as horrible examples, the victims of vicious legislation and unjust rulings. They will then demand another increase of rates. No sane man wants to starve the railroads. What benefit would anyone receive by doing them an injustice? An increase of freight rates of 25 per cent means, according to Director General Hines, a tax on the American consumer of $4,375,000,000—over $4,000,000,000, or considerably more than all the assessed property in Wisconsin, including all real estate, farms, and personal property of every kind.

I propose to give a few statistics as to the salaries being paid by railroads to the higher-ups as having a bearing on the question of the propriety of the Government guaranteeing the railroads profits and also on the question of whether the railroads have been starved.

GUARANTY COMES AFTER OPERATING EXPENSES.

The Government guaranty of profits to the railroad companies is given regardless of the cost or extravagance in operating the railroads. In this particular it is illuminating to see what some of the operating expenses of the railroad companies are, and in this connection I herewith give a list of the officials and attorneys of the Pennsylvania system who received salaries of $20,000 and in excess of that sum for the year 1917; also a list of the officials and attorneys of some of the other railroads who received a salary of $20,000 or more for the year of 1917. All of these officers, besides their salaries, receive annual passes on all the other railroads and boat lines for themselves and families, also express, telegraph franks, and sleeping-car privileges free for themselves and families, besides their own private car in many cases.

The following were the officials and attorneys of the Pennsylvania System who received salaries of $20,000 and in excess of that sum for the year 1917. These statistics regarding salaries are official, having been taken from the Government Railroad Wage Board:

SALARIES OF THE RAILROAD OFFICIALS COMPARED WITH PUBLIC OFFICIALS.

It is interesting to compare the salaries of the officers and attorneys of the railroad companies with the salaries of Government officials. This comparison is proper and legitimate if the Government of the United States is going to guarantee the profits of the railroad companies the way this bill provides.

The justices of the Supreme Court of the United States receive $14,500 per year.

The Speaker of the House of Representatives receives $12,000 per year.

The United States Senators and Representatives in Congress receive $7,500 per year.

Judges of the Supreme Court of Wisconsin receive $7,500 per year.

The governor of Wisconsin receives $5,000 per year.

The attorney general of the State of Wisconsin receives $5,000 per year.

VALIDATES RAILROAD SECURITIES.

There are other objections to the Esch bill which have been gone into by those who are opposing it which seem like valid objections. The objection is raised that this bill validates all railroad securities whether such securities are fictitious and based upon watered stock or not.

A commission appointed under an act of Congress is now ascertaining the value of the railroads of the United States. It has been engaged in that work for several years and will soon report. It has been estimated by reliable economists that there is from five to eight billion dollars of water represented by stocks and bonds. Whether this is correct or not, no one can speak positively until the valuation of railroads is completed. It is a well-known fact that the railroads made a most bitter fight on the legislation proposing to make this valuation.

The commission making the valuation have already the tentative valuation of 52 of the smaller railroad systems, which I will have published as a part of my remarks. An examination of these figures will disclose that these 52 roads could be reproduced new for $304,439,491, while these same roads are charged up on their books for stocks and bonds issued to the amount of $512,333,636. The difference between these figures is water. In other words, the real value of these 52 railroads is a little less than three-fifths of the aggregate amount of their stocks and bonds. The figures also disclose that these railroads could be reproduced in as good condition as they now are for a little less than one-half of their book-value investment account.

Name of carrier.	Cost of reproduction, new.	Cost of reproduction, less depreciation.	Investment account as stated by carrier.

I think, therefore, that this bill should not commit the Government to any scheme whereby railroad securities are validated.

For the reasons that I have given in the brief statement that I have made, Mr. Speaker, I am constrained to vote against the Esch bill.

Treaty of Peace with Germany.

OF

HON. JOHN K. SHIELDS,

OF TENNESSEE,

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,

Wednesday, November 19, 1919.

The Senate had under consideration the treaty of peace with Germany.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, the covenant of the league of nations constitutes part 1 of the proposed treaty with Germany and other nations, although it is really a distinct and separate matter.

While the organization created is styled "a league of nations," it is, in fact, a political corporate entity—a superstate. It is a government of governments and an alliance of many nations combined. In form it is an autocratic oligarchy, a government composed of a few members, distinguished from a monarchy only by the fact that in the latter all political powers are lodged in one individual.

The organic law of this oligarchy was framed and promulgated by five of the great powers of the world, styling themselves "the principal allied and associated powers"—the British Empire, Japan, and Italy, two Empires and a Kingdom, and the United States and France, two Republics—in secret session, and so constituted that they have and will for all time retain and exercise control of it.

THE COVENANT OF THE LEAGUE.

Mr. President, in order properly to present the questions I propose to discuss at this time I will, as briefly as possible, state the provisions of the covenant. They ought to be read by every American.

The political machinery provided consists of an assembly and of a council and permanent secretary general.

The council is composed of nine members—five permanent members to be appointed by the British Empire, Japan, Italy, the United States, and France, one each; and four temporary members to be appointed by the King of Spain, the King of Greece, the King of the Belgians, and the Governments of Brazil and Switzerland, one each, whom the permanent members have the influence to have removed and others elected in their places from time to time.

The assembly is composed of three representatives—with one vote—of all the original members of the league, as follows: United States of America, Belgium, Bolivia, Brazil, British Empire, Canada, Australia, South Africa, New Zealand, India, China, Cuba, Ecuador, France, Greece, Guatemala, Haiti, Hejaz, Honduras, Italy, Japan, Liberia, Nicaragua, Panama, Peru, Poland, Portugal, Roumania, Serb-Croat-Slovene State, Siam, Czecho-Slovakia, and Uruguay. The Argentine Republic, Chili, Colombia, Denmark, Netherlands, Norway, Paraguay, Persia, Salvador, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, and Venezuela are invited to become members; and any fully self-governing State, dominion, or colony may be admitted by a two-thirds vote of the assembly and qualifying as prescribed by the assembly in regard to military, naval, and air forces and armaments.

The secretary general is elected by the assembly. All positions are open to men and women. The members of the assembly and council and the secretary general are officers of the league and not of the governments appointing them. They act without the sanction of oath, without bond, and uncontrolled by any code of laws. It is a government of men and not of laws. Geneva, Switzerland, is the capital of the league. The action of the assembly and council must, in some instances, be unanimous and in others by a majority of members represented at the meeting, but parties interested in a dispute can not vote.

Diplomatic privileges and immunities common to the representatives of sovereign States are given the officials of the league.

SOVEREIGN POWERS DELEGATED.

Executive, legislative, and judicial powers—sovereign powers exercised by independent governments—are conferred on the council and the assembly—chiefly the council—in broad and general terms common to constitutions, and the construction of them is left to these bodies—no other power being authorized to do so—without appeal or review. They are broadly empowered "to deal with any matter within the sphere of action of the league or affecting the peace of the world."

The express powers conferred include those of organization, procedure, constitution of a commission on military, naval, and air matters, action deemed wise and effectual to safeguard the peace of nations and circumstances affecting international relations which threaten to disturb international peace; jurisdiction over disputes likely to lead to rupture between nations, and of those suitable for arbitration, such as interpretation of treaties; questions of international law and existence of facts which constitute a breach of international obligations; reparation to be made under certain circumstances and steps to give effect to awards made; plans for the adoption of a court of international justice; disputes which are likely to lead to a rupture which are not submitted to arbitration, and steps necessary for the maintenance of right and justice exclusive of those found by the council to arise out of a matter which, by international law, is solely within the domestic jurisdiction of a party; to recommend to the Governments concerned what effective military, naval, or air forces the members shall contribute to the armed forces to be used to protect the covenants of the league; to inquire into disputes between nations not members of the league; make recommendations and, if those recommendations are not complied with, to take such measures as will prevent hostilities and result in the settlement of disputes; to supervise treaties in existence and to be made between members of the league; to appoint mandatories to govern backward nations, including the overseas African colonies of Germany and portions of the Ottoman Empire, their powers to be determined by the council, to whom they shall report; to formulate plans for the reduction of national armaments of the members of the league; general supervision over labor, and the execution of agreements concerning traffic in women and children, opium, and other dangerous drugs; the supervision of trade in arms and ammunition where necessary in the common interest; to make provisions for freedom of communications and of transit and equitable treatment for the commerce of the members of the league.

Mr. President, the members of the league further agree and undertake to respect and preserve as against external aggression the territorial integrity and existing political independence of all of its members; to take such action when war or threat of war, whether immediately affecting any of the members of the league or not, as may be deemed wise and effectual to safeguard the peace of nations; to consider the action of any member that may resort to war in disregard of the covenants of the league to have committed an act of war against all other members and to immediately subject such members to the severance of all trade or financial relations and its nationals from all intercourse—personal, financial, or commercial—with those of the covenant-breaking State, the council to recommend to the members what effective military, naval, or air forces they shall contribute to the armed forces to be used to protect the covenants of the league; and to support one another in the financial and economic measures which should be taken in order to minimize loss and inconvenience and in resisting any special measures aimed at one of their number, and afford passage through their territories to forces of the league.

These are powers that no nation or group of nations has ever exercised and an alliance of nations beyond anything before contemplated.

The delegation of these vast and comprehensive powers to the league by the member nations is necessarily a surrender of their sovereignty and independence to that extent, for they are powers which can not be vested in and exercised by two governments at the same time. While all the powers of government are not conferred, those that are delegated are sovereign and such as are exercised only by sovereign nations.

The constitutionality, or rather the unconstitutionality, of the delegation of the powers of the Federal Government has been ably argued, and I do not propose to go into that subject. I concur fully in the position that the President and the Senate under the treaty-making power have no authority to delegate or abdicate the powers or sovereignty of our Government, as proposed in the covenant.

AN ENTANGLING ALLIANCE.

Mr. President, the subject which I now wish to discuss in the limited time at my command is the startling proposition proposed in the covenant of the league of nations that we abandon the fixed policy of the United States against entangling alliances with foreign nations and intervention in their political affairs which the founders of our Government adopted contemporaneously with the establishment of our independence, a policy which has been pursued so long and so uniformly that it has become a part of the organic law controlling our foreign relations. This, in my opinion, is the most important, vital, and fundamental objection to the United States becoming a member of the league of nations and a party to the proposed alliance of more than one-half of the nations of the world, with all the obligations and responsibilities provided for in the covenant. Therefore, without proper reservations to protect us from the dangers which are inseparably connected with that course, I can not vote for the approval and ratification of the treaty under consideration.

FOUNDERS OF OUR FOREIGN POLICY.

Mr. President, the magnificent statesmen who planned the Government of the United States, drafted its incomparable Constitution, and launched the Nation as a free, sovereign, and independent power stand out as the wisest and greatest publicists history records in any country in any age. Their work and their wisdom were not only gratefully acknowledged and appreciated by the people of the United States but challenged the admiration of the world. The Government they created and organized "by the people, of the people, and for the people" is without a parallel in human annals. As a representative Republic, founded upon the principle of government by consent of the governed and for the maintenance of civil liberty, it excels all others. The wisdom and prophetic vision of the great statesmen to whom we owe all this must ever be a beacon light for us to follow. Their successors in the highest offices in the gift of the people have been equally able and wise, and their precepts and advice are also entitled to our renewed earnest consideration.

The Confederation of the States in February, 1778, negotiated with France the only treaty of alliance, defensive and offensive, which this country has ever made with a European nation, a step which involved us in so many difficulties that it was abrogated in 1798.

Our statesmen of that day were so aroused to the dangers of complicating our country with the strifes, jealousies, and political intrigues of European nations and ever-recurring, if not constant, wars that have always prevailed among them concerning dynastic successions and extensions of territory that they then adopted our traditional policy of nonintervention in the affairs of other countries, and we have religiously and consistently refrained from interference in European affairs and entangling alliances with foreign Governments from that day down to the present. No man will deny that just such a policy has contributed preeminently to the greatness, the wealth, the prosperity, and the peace of our people. There have been during that time more than 60 wars in Europe, to say nothing of the dozen or more now being waged there, from which we have escaped unhurt. The numerous nations of Europe, Asia, and Africa, with the exception of Great Britain, are foreign to us in race, language, religion, form of government, traditions, and aspirations; we have nothing in common with them. They are filled with passions and prejudices growing out of racial, religious, and political differences centuries old. Their congested populations have always overflown their boundaries and caused them to struggle for other lands for their support. These conditions exist to-day, aggravated by the machinations and activities of socialists, syndicalists, soviets, and anarchists, and there is no probability that there will be any change for the better in the near future. This was plainly evident in the struggles that took place at the peace conference in Paris and are still there waged for the annexation of territories and peoples without their consent.

PRESIDENT WILSON'S VIEW OF CONDITIONS.

President Wilson was firmly impressed with these conditions when, in a speech in Boston on his return to America in February last, he said:

But you understand that the nations of Europe have again and again clashed with one another in competitive interest. It is impossible for men to forget those sharp issues that were drawn between them in times past. It is impossible for men to believe that all ambitions have all of a sudden been foregone. They remember territory that was coveted; they remember rights that it was attempted to extort; they remember political ambitions which it was attempted to realize. And while they believe that men have come into a different temper, they can not forget these things, and so they do not resort to one another for a dispassionate view of the matters in controversy.

There is now in the United States and in Europe a movement by the supporters of the league to have us accept a mandate for the Ottoman Empire and Armenia for five years, which would require an army of 250,000 men and an expense of $1,000,000,000 a year. Are you willing to sacrifice the lives of thousands of American boys for the benefit of the Turks and Armenians? That is what will be demanded of us if we become a party to this far-reaching alliance.

Mr. President, I can not in my own language fitly set forth the earnestness of our statesmen in announcing and urging upon America this wise policy of noninterference and nonintervention in European political affairs, and I must incur the charge of tediousness by giving their pronouncements in their own words.

JEFFERSON'S WARNING AND WASHINGTON'S COUNSEL.

Thomas Jefferson, in a letter to Mr. Gerry in 1779, said:

I am for free commerce with all nations, and political connections with none; I am for not linking ourselves by new treaties with the quarrels of Europe, or entering the field of slaughter to preserve their balance, or to join in the confederacy of kings to war against the principles of liberty. The first object of my heart is my own country.

George Washington, whose memory will ever be sacred to all Americans, in his Farewell Address to the American people, September, 1796, announced the great policy which should control the United States in foreign affairs in these words:

Against the insidious wiles of foreign influence (I conjure you to believe me, fellow citizens) the jealousy of a free people ought to be constantly awake, since history and experience prove that foreign influence is one of the most baneful foes of republican government. * * *

The great rule of conduct for us, in regard to foreign nations, is in extending our commercial relations, to have with them as little political connection as possible. So far as we have already formed engagements, let them be fulfilled with perfect good faith. Here let us stop. Europe has a set of primary interests which to us have none, or a very remote, relation. Hence she must be engaged in frequent controversies, the causes of which are essentially foreign to our concerns. Hence, therefore, it must be unwise in us to implicate ourselves by artificial ties in the ordinary vicissitudes of her politics or the ordinary combinations and collisions of her friendships or enmities. Our detached and distant situation invites and enables us to pursue a different course. * * *

Why forego the advantages of so peculiar a situation? Why quit our own to stand upon foreign ground? Why, by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Europe, entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalship, interest, humor, or caprice? It is our true policy to steer clear of permanent alliances with any portion of the foreign world. * * *

Taking care always to keep ourselves, by suitable establishments, on a respectable defensive posture, we may safely trust to temporary alliances for extraordinary emergencies. * * *

Constantly keeping in view that it is folly in one nation to look for disinterested favors from another; that it must pay with a portion of its independence for whatever it may accept under that character; that by such acceptance it may place itself in the condition of having given equivalents for nominal favors, and yet of being reproached with ingratitude for not giving more. There can be no greater error than to expect or calculate upon real favors from nation to nation. It is an illusion which experience must cure, which a just pride ought to discard.

Mr. President, how well the advice given by the great Washington applies to the present time! The conditions are the same and the reasons given by him for such policy are to be found in the present chaotic conditions of European countries.

Thomas Jefferson in his inaugural address, March 4, 1801, said:

Equal and exact justice to all men, of whatever state or persuasion, religious or political; peace, commerce, and honest friendship with all nations, entangling alliances with none.

In a letter to President Monroe, June, 1823, he said:

Do what is right, leaving the people of Europe to act their follies and crimes among themselves, while we pursue in good faith the paths of peace and prosperity.

And, again, he said:

For us to attempt by war to reform all Europe, and bring them to principles of morality and a respect for the equal rights of all nations, would show us to be only maniacs.

President Monroe in his message to Congress, December 2, 1823, said:

Our policy in regard to Europe, which was adopted at an early state of the wars which have so long agitated that quarter of the globe, nevertheless remains the same, which is not to interfere in the internal concerns of any of the powers.

President John Quincy Adams said in a like message, March 15, 1826:

Reasoning upon the state of things, from the sound and judicious principles of Washington, must we not say that the period which he predicted was not far off has arrived that America has a set of primary interests which have none or a remote relation to Europe; that the interference of Europe therefore in those concerned should be spontaneously withheld by her upon the same principles that we have never interfered with hers.

JACKSON, POLK, AND JOHNSON.

President Andrew Jackson, in his fourth message to Congress, December 4, 1832, said:

Our best wishes on all occasions, our good offices when required, will be offered to promote the domestic tranquillity and foreign peace of all nations with whom we have any intercourse. Any intervention in their affairs further than this, even by an expression of official opinion, is contrary to our principles of international politics and will always be avoided.

President James K. Polk clearly and positively reaffirmed the policy of nonintervention, as declared by Washington, in his first annual message, December, 1845.

President Andrew Johnson, in his first message, December 4, 1865, said:

Under any circumstances our great extent of territory and variety of climate, producing almost everything that is necessary for the wants and even the comforts of man, make us singularly independent of the warring policy of foreign powers, and protect us against every temptation to entangling alliances while * * * the strength that comes from harmony will be our best security against nations who feel power and forget right.

President Grover Cleveland said:

The genius of our institutions, the needs of our people in their home life, and the attention which is demanded for the settlement and development of the resources of our vast territory, dictate the scrupulous avoidance of any departure from that foreign policy commended by the history, the traditions, and the prosperity of our Republic. It is the policy of independence, favored by our position, and defended by our known love of justice and by our own power. It is the policy of peace suitable to our interests. It is the policy of Monroe and of Washington and Jefferson: "Peace, commerce, and honest friendship with all nations; entangling alliance with none."

Mr. President, there are other pronouncements in accord with these in the messages and official documents of John Adams, James Madison, Martin Van Buren, William Henry Harrison, John Tyler, and Millard Fillmore and their great Secretaries of State, but it would extend these remarks too long to quote from them all. I have only read enough to show that this policy has been persisted in throughout our entire history, and my embarrassment in the selection has been in the wealth of material which the records of our country afford.

CONDITIONS THE SAME.

Mr. President, it is argued that conditions and times have changed since the days when these wise and prudent utterances were made and our foreign policy adopted, and that we are now a world power and must take our part in the world's concerns. The assumption of facts is untrue and the argument made unsound. The conditions are now the same, and the principles upon which our policy is founded are applicable for all time.

Above all things, human nature is unchanged, and the greed, ambitions, and passions of men are the same.

GROVER CLEVELAND'S AMERICAN POLICY.

President Cleveland in his Venezuelan message, speaking of the Monroe doctrine, which is the corollary of that of nonintervention, and answering the contention of Great Britain that the reasons justifying its annunciation by President Monroe were inapplicable "to the state of things in which we live at the present day," said:

Without attempting extended argument in reply to these positions, it may not be amiss to suggest that the doctrine upon which we stand is strong and sound because its enforcement is important to our peace and safety as a Nation, and is essential to the integrity of our free institutions and the tranquil maintenance of our distinctive form of government. It was intended to apply to every stage of our national life, and can not become obsolete while our Republic endures. If the balance of power is justly a cause for jealous anxiety among the Governments of the Old World, and a subject for our absolute noninterference, none the less is an observance of the Monroe doctrine of vital concern to our people and their Government.

PRESIDENT WILSON DECLARED HIMSELF.

President Wilson was in full accord with Grover Cleveland—that there was no change of conditions justifying our abandonment of the policy of "nonintervention"—when in his speech in Washington on May 6, 1914, he said:

There are just as vital things stirring now that concern the existence of the Nation as were stirring then—to wit, in Washington's time—and every man who worthily stands in this presence should examine himself and see whether he has the full conception of what it means. America should live her own life. Washington saw it when he wrote his Farewell Address. It was not merely because of passing and transient circumstances that Washington said we must keep from entangling alliances. It was because he saw that no country had yet set its face in the same direction in which America had set her face. We can not form alliances with those who are not going our way, and in our might and in the confidence and definiteness of our own purpose we need not and we should not form alliances with any nation in the world. Those who are right, those who study their consciences in determining their policy, those who hold their honor higher than their advantages, do not need alliances. When we go out from this presence we ought to take the idea with us that we, too, are devoted to the purpose of enabling America to live her own life, to be the justest, the most progressive, the most honorable, the most enlightened Nation in the world.

In his speech in New York, January 27, 1916, he said:

America has always stood resolutely and absolutely for the right of every people to determine its own destiny and its own affairs. I am so absolute a disciple of that doctrine that I am ready to do that thing and observe that principle in dealing with the troubled affairs of our distressed neighbor to the south. And similarly it is the passion of America to be permitted to live her own life according to her own principle. The only thing that she profoundly resents, or will ever profoundly resent, is having her life and freedom interfered with. Those are the terms of self-respect upon which we deal with one another as individuals, and those are the terms of self-respect upon which nations deal with one another.

And, again, at Des Moines, Iowa, February 1, 1916, referring to the probability of our entering the World War, he said:

There are actually men in America who are preaching war, who are preaching the duty of the United States to do what it never would before—seek entanglement in the controversies which have arisen on the other side of the water, abandon its habitual and traditional policy, and deliberately engage in the conflict which is now engulfing the rest of the world. I do not know what the standard of citizenship of these gentleman may be. I only know that I, for one, can not subscribe to those sentiments.

WHEN THE AMERICAN POLICY WAS CHALLENGED.

Mr. President, the policy of nonintervention in the affairs of European nations came acutely before the Congress in 1852, on the occasion of the visit of Louis Kossuth, the Hungarian patriot, to this country for the purpose of inducing the United States to aid the Hungarians in their revolt against Austria, in the consideration of resolutions concerning this matter introduced in the Senate and the House.

A great many of the Senators and Representatives in the two Houses engaged in the discussion. Those from Tennessee were particularly prominent. They were able men, and some of the greatest and most learned lawyers and statesmen the great State which I have the honor in part to here represent has produced. I have read their speeches on that occasion with the greatest interest, and it is deeply gratifying that in my course here I find myself thinking the same way and following in their illustrious footsteps, which I am content to do.

The greater part of the discussion concerned a resolution introduced by Senator Clarke, of Rhode Island, which reaffirmed adherence to the counsel of Washington as interpreted by Jefferson and reannounced by every succeeding Chief Executive and indorsed by every Congress when the issue was presented.

TRUE AMERICANS FROM TENNESSEE.

John Bell and James C. Jones, Senators from Tennessee, warmly supported that resolution.

Senator Bell made an exhaustive argument and a most illuminating and complete statement of the conditions existent in Europe and characteristic of European institutions. Of the resolutions declaratory of the American principle he said:

They are declarations of principles of deep, vital, lasting importance, involving the interests, the peace, the honor, the safety, the dignity of the Nation. Is it not true that a recurrence to the ancient usages, habits, principles, and doctrines of this Government is often conducive to the public interest? May we not by a recurrence to those principles learn a lesson of wisdom, judging by the experience of the past, by which we may be guided? * * * I come to a different conclusion from those who are of the opinion that there will be no war within any short period. There are too many causes of discord; too many jealousies; too many outcast, intriguing, and influential dynasties; too many rival interests; too many great armies ready to take the field, and, withal, the never-dying ambition and thirst for dynastic and national aggrandizement to allow any faith in the hypothesis of continued peace. * * * Well may we invoke the spirit and counsels of Washington to inspire us with wisdom and kindle once more in our bosoms the flame of Revolutionary patriotism.

Senator James C. Jones, in a speech full of ardent sentiment of patriotic devotion, said:

Every man here in this country has an inheritance in the fame and memory of George Washington; no American would sacrifice his interest in that glorious legacy but with his life. * * * When we shall have made our own people entirely happy and prosperous, when the Treasury shall be overflowed, when the Navy shall find nothing to do, when the Army shall become a burden upon our hands, then we might go out and fight the battles of other peoples. But first let us establish ourselves upon a basis not only honorable but safe and perpetual.

The Representatives in the House from Tennessee were in full accord with the Senators.

Andrew Johnson, while he did not participate in the discussion, showed where he stood by his votes, which included opposition to the principle of intervention even to the extent of declining to receive Kossuth on the floor of the House.

THE STAR OF WASHINGTON.

Col. John H. Savage, with the blunt, straightforward force which characterized his long public career in Tennessee and for Tennessee as a soldier and as a Representative, said:

It is right that we deal honestly with Kossuth. I confess, for myself, I have not the ingenuity to pay a compliment to his person and a curse to his principles by the same act. I am the representative of a portion of the people of Tennessee. I have been sworn to support the Constitution of the United States, and I am willing to perish in a struggle for that purpose whenever an Almighty Providence shall so decree. I have not been sworn to support the constitution of Hungary, or to go on any crusade for the world's liberty. I am not willing to imperil the interests I have sworn to guard by an interference with the affairs of European States. I am an American. I want no new light to shine on my pathway in politics. The star of Washington has lost to my vision none of its charms and brilliancy. It rose in glory with the birth of our Government to shine eternal and unchanging from horizon to horizon of our political life. My feet shall follow but one path; my eyes shall see but one light, although many others may glitter in the heavens. Although many stars there may be to shine upon man's gloomy way and doubtful destiny, yet other lights have come—not stars of an age or of eternity, but airy, insubstantial things, illusions, meteors of the moment that have risen in the dark—we know not whence nor how—whose only glory is in their fall. Sir, I am content with the history of my Government. It is a lesson of wisdom. I want no new apostle, no new Bible, no new faith. I would not alter one syllable of these things I cherish in my country as my American legacy.

Gen. William Cullom spoke from the heart of Tennessee for that day. He said:

A new and dangerous doctrine has been shadowed forth through the speeches of gentlemen from which, as an American, I instinctively turn. My American pride has impelled me to take my stand where shall be my last intrenchment, my own country. Ours is justly called a model republican Government. Its enemies point to it as a mere experiment. An experiment it will prove without desired results, if your quacks are permitted to practice upon it their own conception. Gentlemen, too, have pointed to it as a beacon light to which the world has turned its eyes in the struggles of peoples for liberty against despotism. May the great light be maintained always steady, always constant. In the hands of so-called progressive gentlemen it would be a mere jack-o'-lantern leading into quagmires and marshes. I am not prepared to commit this country by my vote to the new and dangerous policy of espousing the quarrels and wars of other and foreign governments. I am for maintaining our national honor and rights at any and all times, be the consequences what they may. I adhere to the sacred axiom—"Friendship with all nations, entangling alliance with none." I am here, sir, to do homage to no man living. I am no man worshiper. If I were, the real patriots of my own country would have my first adoration. In the language of another, on a solemn occasion, "I bow the knee to no power save God Almighty." I lick the dust from no man's feet. I care not what his trappings of rank or possession of political power may be. I am an American. I am a Tennesseean.

ISHAM G. HARRIS DEVOTED TO THE DOCTRINE.

Isham G. Harris, afterward governor and Senator, always a man of action and constructive genius in the politics of his State and Nation, whose democracy and patriotism no man ever doubted, proposed an amendment to the resolution welcoming Kossuth which instructed the committee conducting the guest to the House floor to inform him that the settled policy of this Government is "friendship with all nations, entangling alliance with none." In a brief speech he said:

While I am as ready as any gentleman to extend to Kossuth a personal compliment, I am equally ready to resist to the last extremity on this floor any attempt to commit this Government to desertion of the principle of nonintervention which we have cherished from the earliest infancy of our Government until this hour. The principles and policy which were necessary for the healthful development of our young Republic are just as essential now, and will be ever hereafter, to protect its purity and guarantee its power.

Mr. President, I have given the utterances of some of the greatest Tennesseeans and most illustrious Americans—three of them were Presidents of the United States, five United States Senators, and five governors of my great State, and the others Representatives of national reputation.

Mr. President, I know of no greater privilege and seek no higher honor than to conform my views of my duty to my country to those of these great Tennesseeans. They were the descendants and representatives of descendants of the frontiersmen who, under John Sevier, crossed the mountains and whipped the British and their Tory allies at King's Mountain, and the sons and grandsons of those other gallant Tennesseeans who, under Andrew Jackson, destroyed Packenham's army of peninsula veterans marching against New Orleans with the brutal battle cry "Beauty and booty." When I agree with them I have renewed confidence in the integrity and patriotism of my course and the consciousness of a duty to my country and my State faithfully performed.

Mr. President, it is unnecessary for me to restate the reasons for this wise policy of nonintervention and nonentangling alliances. They have been fully stated by our greatest statesmen. The political conditions of Europe are the same as they were, unless more forbidding, when this policy was adopted by Washington and his successors and approved by our present distinguished Chief Executive. President Cleveland and President Wilson have both said that they were to be followed and observed so long as our Government endured. We have grown great, prosperous, and strong, and have been blessed with peace under this policy. Why should we abandon it and become a party to an alliance with obligations and dangers greater than any known to history and conceded to be an experiment of a most doubtful character, fraught with probabilities of most disastrous consequences to our Government and to our people? Why should we in this way imperil the safety, tranquillity, and happiness of our country for the sole benefit of other people? Why should we surrender our proud position of a free, sovereign, and independent people for that of a subject nation? We have been furnished with no satisfactory reasons for such a radical change in the fixed policy of our country. We must act upon our own judgment and determine whether we shall follow the advice of the founders of our Government and our great statesmen of succeeding days or abandon it for a new and unheard-of policy given birth in a council in Paris, dominated by the representatives of four foreign powers, all controlled by selfish motives adverse to our interests. I have chosen to follow and be governed by the American doctrine proclaimed in America for Americans.

CONSTITUTIONAL DUTIES OF SENATORS.

Mr. President, I have heard read from the desk the letter of the President to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], in which he says:

I sincerely hope that the friends and supporters of the treaty will vote against the Lodge resolution of ratification—meaning the resolution formulated by the Committee on Foreign Relations and presented by the chairman, containing the reservations approved by a majority of the Senate.

When the Constitution of the United States was framed, in the first draft the power of declaring war was vested in the Congress, and that of making peace was conferred upon the Senate. Afterwards, when it was considered that foreign affairs were within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Federal Government and the Senators were representatives of the several States, and treaties could be negotiated with more facility by a single head, this clause was changed so as to confer upon the President of the United States "the power, by and with the advice of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur." In other words, the power to make treaties was divided so as to give the President the power to negotiate them tentatively, but that of final approval was vested in the Senate, two-thirds of those present concurring. These respective powers are conferred by the same high authority, are of equal force and dignity, and, according to the policy of the division of the powers of government pervading our entire constitutional system, are to be exercised separately and independently by the two coordinate departments or branches of the Government having jurisdiction of them, and all the treaties made by our Government with foreign governments have been negotiated and approved or amended along these lines.

Mr. President, this division of the powers of government among separate and coordinate branches—the executive, legislative, and judicial—and the maintenance of their independence was deemed by the fathers of our country as of the greatest importance and necessary to the perpetuation of our liberties.

Washington, in his Farewell Address, opposing one department exercising the powers of another, said:

The spirit of encroachment tends to consolidate the powers of all governments in one, and thus to create, whatever the form of government, a real despotism.

Madison, in the Federalist, wrote:

The accumulation of all powers—legislative, executive, and judicial—in the same hands, whether of one, a few, or many, whether hereditary, self-appointed, or elective, may justly be pronounced the very definition of tyranny.

John Adams wrote:

It is by balancing one of these three powers against the other two that the efforts in human nature toward tyranny can alone be checked and restrained and any degree of freedom preserved.

Webster stated the same doctrine when he said:

The separation of the departments (of government), so far as practicable, and the preservation of clear lines between them is the fundamental idea in the creation of all of our constitutions, and doubtless the continuance of regulated liberty depends on maintaining these boundaries.

The duty of the Senate is plain—conscientiously to examine treaties when presented to it by the President and, in their honest judgment, if found in conflict with the Constitution or destructive of the rights of the American people to amend or reject them.

REGRET DIFFERENCE WITH COLLEAGUES.

Mr. President, I believe that every Senator in this Chamber, without regard to political alignments, in coming to conclusions and voting upon the various questions presented, is animated by the purest conceptions of duty and the highest patriotism. I do not impugn the motives of any Senator, yielding to each and every one his unquestioned right to exercise his own judgment and be governed by the dictates of his own conscience, rights which I demand for myself. The faithful discharge of the great trust confided to us requires that we should not allow personal considerations, personal preferences, or partisanship to enter into our deliberations or affect our judgment. The questions are not personal nor political. They are American in every sense of the term.

I regret that my conclusions concerning the league and treaty are at variance with those of the great titular leader of the party to which I belong and those of the majority of my colleagues of the same political faith, but I can not yield to the views of others in what I conceive to be my duty to my country.

My first duty is to America and Americans, and in the discussion of this treaty and in voting upon the several measures that have come before the Senate I have been governed by an honest and conscientious desire to discharge that duty, and I have done so regardless of what criticisms may be made of my conduct by those who differ with me. The duty is mine, and I am compelled to discharge it according to my own judgment and the dictates of my own conscience.

The reservations contained in the resolution are all for the protection of the American Government and the American people. This is not denied. While I would prefer some stronger reservations, I have agreed to these that the peace—which, in fact, exists—may be technically concluded with Germany, and I shall vote for the resolution of ratification as reported by the committee.

THE WAR FOUGHT IN THE NATIONAL DEFENSE.

Mr. President, it has become quite common for those supporting the league of nations to say that the United States became a party to this war and sent its soldiers to France as crusaders in the interest of mankind to establish the principles of liberty in European countries and promote the peace of the world. While this sounds great and generous and is altruism in its highest sense, it is untrue.

Germany made war upon the United States by openly and flagrantly murdering its men and women while pursuing their lawful business abroad, sinking the ships and otherwise destroying their property, undertaking to prohibit them from exercising our rights of travel and commerce upon the high seas, and had determined upon carrying the war to America, with a view of universal empire as soon as she had conquered France and England, as then seemed likely. We had before that declared our neutrality, and the President, in messages to the Congress and addresses to the people throughout the country, had urged its observance. His policy of nonintervention in the affairs of the belligerent nations became a great political issue, and upon it he was reelected. It was only when it became apparent that the protection of the American people in the exercise of their national and international rights and for their just and proper defense against invasion by the armies of Germany did Congress by resolution declare that Germany had made war upon us, and authorized the President to prosecute our defense of the war thus thrust upon us to a successful conclusion, pledging the resources of the Nation for that purpose.

We deemed it wise to fight the Germans on French soil, and with the aid of the English and French Armies rather than later fight them alone in America, although we had no doubt that we could defeat them and that our Nation was unconquerable.

The Congress of the United States would never have declared war, created a national indebtedness of $25,000,000,000, or enacted a conscript law to send our young men to France, there to fill untimely graves, but to redress great wrongs to our people and for the national defense.

Congress had no warrant under the Constitution to declare war for any other purposes, and had I not been convinced that it was necessary for these purposes I could not now look into the faces of the fathers and mothers of the young men of Tennessee who lie buried in foreign graves without a conviction that I was a party to the murder of their sons.

The constant assertion that we went into this war for other purposes than the national defense is not only a reflection upon the President and the Congress but upon the patriotism of our brave soldiers who fought for their country and a distortion of the truths of history. As an argument in behalf of the league of nations it is without facts to support it and but shows the weakness of the cause.

INDEPENDENCE NOT ISOLATION.

The policy of Washington's Farewell Address does not mean isolation as asserted by the advocates of the league, but freedom and independence. Isolation is such a complete detachment from the world as would make us a hermit nation, but independence is freedom from entanglements by artificial ties which impair our freedom of action. It does not interfere with America playing a great part in the affairs of the world as she always has done, but only forbids entangling alliances which for all future time mortgage the judgment and commit the destinies of the American people not according to their will but according to the will of a supergovernment. The United States has always favored liberty, peace, and honorable relations among nations, and it can and will continue that course in the future without being bonded or coerced by foreign nations. Alliances are not necessary to make an honorable nation discharge its just and righteous international obligations.

The league would not give us the leadership of the world, because British influences dominated its preparation and will control the assembly and the council when it is finally organized. We must determine for ourselves what cause is righteous and when we will take part in behalf of other nations. We can not submit our Government and our people to the control of a council of foreigners sitting in a foreign country with safety, and I am unwilling to form an alliance which compels us to do so.

INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE AND COURT.

Mr. President, I believe in peace and I hate war and the horrible suffering that it brings to mankind. I would favor a great council of free, sovereign, and independent nations where all differences and grievances could be discussed and, if possible, compromised and amicably settled upon just principles and the inherent rights of men. I would favor a great international court of justice, where the controversies of nations could be heard and determined and impartial justice administered without delay and without price upon the principles of righteousness and international law.

Washington, Lincoln, Cleveland, Taft, and President Wilson favored these methods for adjusting international differences, and we now have The Hague court and about 35 treaties with various nations negotiated by Mr. Root and Mr. Bryan while they were Secretaries of State, under President Taft and President Wilson, for these purposes. I think such arrangements are feasible without surrendering the sovereign rights of any government and without obligating any people to sacrifice themselves for the exclusive benefit of others.

Mr. President, I can not give my consent to the proposed supergovernment and alliance with more than 50 nations, calling for the use of military and economic forces in coercing those who are members, as well as those who are excluded from it. It is an abandonment of the principles of government "by consent of the governed" and of representative democracy, and substitutes for them force and militarism. It will promote war and not peace, and under it instead of local wars we will have world wars. It means increased taxation and the conscription of American boys for service in foreign wars in which our country has no material interest. The inevitable consequences will be the destruction of our free institutions and the happiness and prosperity of our people. When we become a party to such supergovernment and entangling alliance we have reached the beginning of the end of the world's greatest Republic.
